Fraud charges prompt probe of voter registrations

By MICHAEL GARDNER

THERE HAVE been so many rumors of possible voter registration fraud for the upcoming Carmel City Council election that the League of Women Voters of the Monterey Peninsula will check the rolls to ensure that voters reside within the city limits.

League President Lolita Fisher said the check will focus on the downtown commercial district addresses once the Monterey County Elections Office returns the final listing of registered voters.

The deadline for registration was March 10 and Monterey County Registrar of Voters Mary Blanton announced that a final voter registration roll will be available by Friday, March 14.

Illegal registration is an act of perjury, which is a felony and punishable by state imprisonment, according to the district attorney's office.

Fisher told the Carmel Pine Cone/-Carmel Valley Outlook that the investigation will be conducted as "absolutely a non-partisan league activity."

Opening the investigation in the business district is an obvious confrontation that the league is concerned about. But voter registration fraud appears that it may be widespread for the past few weeks.

The council race, beginning April 8, is of special importance to Carmel voters this year, with incumbent Mayor Charlotte Townsend and incumbent Councilman David Maradei not seeking reelection and both positions being actively challenged by a relatively large number of candidates.

But many of the business leaders do not live in town so they cannot vote for the candidates they support.

Several business leaders have been seen in town distributing voter registration cards and the forms have been prominently displayed in shop windows.

The question the league has is whether these new registrations are legitimate.

There are five common instances of voter registration fraud:

• A person owns property in town and registers the home while he lives outside the city limits. Legally, he registers to vote at the address of his rented property in town.

• A businessperson lives outside the city limits, but registers at his shop or office in town.

• A military resident registers at a relative's home such as his parent's.

• A person purposely registers to vote using the city address for voting privileges.

• A boss registers his employees at the place of business even though they may live as far away as Marina or Seaside.

Fisher said the league became involved after many inquiries to the office.

The plan is for the league to at first check the registration rolls "strictly in the business district."

Addresses will be checked and if there are discrepancies the league then will "knock on doors and make some inquiries," Fisher explained.

Fisher noted that the registration check is a purely non-partisan effort. No candidate is going to be told. We have not heard from

Secretary of State March Fong Eu who ordered the registrar's office to check the rolls and prosecute the responsible parties of the district attorney.

Those who want to clarify their voter registration status can call the county elections office for assistance.

Yes, Virginia, there is a city council race

With all the hoopla over mayoral campaign, some may be forgetting the 'other' race

By MICHAEL GARDNER

GATHERED ON the balcony of La Playa Hotel were several tourists hoping to catch an early morning glimpse of their movie screen idol, Clint Eastwood.

Inside the meeting room, about 100 Carmel residents, businesspeople and news media were doing likewise.

A glimpse was just about all that was afforded not only of Eastwood, but also of the other 11 candidates seeking election to the Carmel City Council April 8.

The Carmel Business Association candidates forum March 6 — hampered by a two-minute time limit each for the dozen candidates — will not be remembered as a great "Checkers" debate, but at least the standing room only audience got for most of them their first introduction to many of the council candidates and four mayoral challengers

The Carmel Business Association (CBA) forum for the first time brought together before an open-to-the-public session most of the council candidates: incumbent Bob Stephenson; and challengers Tom May, Anne Woolworth, Bob Fischer, Elinor Laiolo and Don Lampson.

Incumbent David Maradei did not attend and challenger Robert Weber left the meeting before his turn to speak.

Two council members are to be elected to four-year terms.

Sparked by Eastwood's candidacy, the mayoral campaign has been given most of the spotlight as the world-famous actor, producer and film director challenges incumbent Charlotte Townsend. Also seeking to replace Townsend are businessman Paul Laub and Tim Grady, a member of the Environmentalist Party.

The mayor is elected to serve a two-year term.

STEPHENSON, an incumbent seeking his second four-year term, will mark his 40th year in Carmel this summer.

"Contrary to one man's opinion, there is a business person on the city council," said building designer Stephenson in making a dig at Eastwood's past charges.

Espousing his public service record, Stephenson told the audience that he has a decade of experience; he served six years on the planning commission before being elected to the city council four years ago.

Stephenson noted that he planned to outline many of the city's achievements, 26 subjects in all, but that the two-minute time limit forced him to abandon that idea.

Instead, Stephenson's tact was to point out that the city has turned past practices of "fighting brush fires," and it now plans for the future rather than reacting.

Charges by the challengers that the council has irresponsibly spent city funds "really galls me," said Stephenson as he launched into budget numbers.

Stephenson pointed out that over the past three years the municipal budget has increased a mere 3 percent, or an average of 1 percent annually. As a matter of fact, the 1985-86 budget is $25,000 less than the previous year's expenditures.

"How many merchants have held their prices to 1 percent per year?" Stephenson asked. "How many landlords have increased their rents more than 1 percent a year?"

Despite the belt-tightening, Stephenson said the city is "fully staffed and fully equipped" to serve its residents" without increasing the property taxes.

The fiscal irresponsibility charge, Stephenson concluded, is "a flat-out falsehood."

May, an independent financial manager, served on the council from 1957 to 1960, but was defeated in his re-election bid.

"Ladies and gentlemen, I happen to be in love with Carmel," he said in his opener. "My roots are deep. I've had my home right here in town for almost 40 years. My devotion to our residential heritage and to our traditional village character is unending. That's why I'm here to you."

May claims that the "quality of life" in Carmel is eroding.

"People's lives in and about Carmel are at stake on three main points more than any others — traffic growth, money waste, and responsible and responsive government," he said.

"We must bolster defenses against the choking traffic that is stealing away our property rights and property values," he continued. "We must stop wasting tax money. We must build up responsible and responsive government."

ON MONEY matters, May uses as example Piccadilly Park, which cost $120,000 to landscape when the price tag should have been $8,000.

And he questions why the city sits on valuable public works property when it could buy a larger site near Brinton's at the mouth of Carmel Valley for much less.

May proposes that the city turn its public works site on Junipero Avenue into a complex for local service trade businesses that promise "quality service at modest rates."

"That's an example of what I mean by giving rebirth to local service trades that save unfair time and travel costs outside of town," he explained.

May says he is the candidate that will bring back a "responsible and responsive" government.

"Residents need a responsible government to guard their property rights and property values. Business people need a council that understands and respects the nature of business...The council should deal with people as people, not as adversaries. Any anti-business feelings should be put to rest," May said.

Fischer is a 38-year resident and ex-Carmel Assistant Police Chief who now helps with his wife's small Ocean Avenue business called Carmel Weddings.

Pointing to his longtime association with the town through police work, Fischer said, "No person in this room knows the Carmel people and the Carmel business community as well as I do."

Fischer contends that the oft-discussed problems between the city and businesses

Fast flashing Farr

Over-reactive speculation

Dear Editor:

I think those many resident voters who are predicting Carmel will suffer from an undesirable influx of people seeking to see the town where Clint Eastwood is the mayor are using this assumption as an excuse to invalidate Mr. Eastwood as a feasible mayoral candidate.

Our town is already a global hotspot for reasons of its own merit, those being its magnificent physical beauty, unique commercial atmosphere, and surrounding areas of fascinating natural, cultural and historical interest. We residents who remain here must feel that our town's notoriety and occasional inconveniences are worth the privilege of ourselves also being able to enjoy its many distinctions.

Mr. Eastwood's residency and activity in our town has never before caused an undue problem for residents. He has been an active and interested member of our community and certainly did not get where he is today by being incapable, uninformed or inaccessible. I say let's not use over-reactive speculation to blot Mr. Eastwood off the ballot of just consideration.

Stop the bulldozers

Dear Editor:

The City of Carmel's acquisition of the Mission Ranch property will provide a long-needed recreational area as well as protecting and preserving a beautiful and deeply historic spot. The Carmel City is to be commended on its wish to do so, and the Carmel Heritage (as well as others concerned) is also to be commended for the time, effort and dedication shown toward this move.

The more of this type of thing we can do, particularly in an area as uniquely enchanting as Carmel and surroundings, the better protection from the monster bulldozer. Present and future generations will be grateful. I pledge my support.

A haven for tourists

Dear Editor:

People from all over the world come to Carmel because it is so beautiful, peaceful and quiet. If Clint Eastwood becomes Mayor of Carmel, this beautiful place will turn into a haven for fans, camp-followers, pick-up trucks, tour buses, etc. He would do to Carmel what his film characters do to towns — they destroy them. Let there be one place on earth that stays beautiful.

Profound statements

Dear Editor:

Carmel Mayor Charlotte Townsend made a rare and "profound" statement in the Friday, Jan. 31 edition of the local daily regarding the performance of the current city council: "I think the accomplishments of this council in the past four years have been profound."

Profound, I should say! National recognition for the ice cream caper. Carmel-By-The-Sea deserves better than the flaccid representation and leadership proffered by the incumbents. What is needed is someone with a sensitivity to Carmel's problems, and the sensibility and capability of doing something about them. Need I say more? The choice is obvious: Clint Eastwood for mayor.

Unsightly metal boxes

Dear Editor:

What is this sudden growth of newspaper vending machines along Ocean Avenue? It started with the shingle-covered rows in front of the library and moved on to the southeast corner of Ocean and Dolores. That was bad enough. Now unsightly metal boxes on stands anchored in the concrete sidewalk have appeared in front of both Carmel Plaza and the Mediterranean Market. Not only are these unsightly, but unnecessary.

Good for better

Dear Editor:

I congratulate Clint Eastwood for his decision to run for mayor of Carmel. This man has obviously decided to put his energy where his mouth is. I have a successful friend who always says if you don't like it change it. Seems this man feels he can create change. Good for him!

Every time I pick up the paper I see he's participating in some fundraiser, the AT&T golf tournament, the Monterey Vineyard benefit for the March of Dimes, etc. This tells me this man cares about his community and is and has been generous with his time and resources. Not only has he been generous with his time and resources, but he's also managed a successful career and is a successful businessman. Before you can give to others you first must realize your own self-worth. Clint Eastwood realizes his self-worth and this posture is a posture I'd like to see in a leader.

Some of the petty comments that I have read and heard since his decision to run for mayor are so limited, it's unbelievable. Comments such as selling tickets to city council meetings and what should be done with residuals and distribution rights. Maybe some consideration should be given to the possibility of Carmel being a community that meets its needs instead of lowering its standards; a city that is learning how to adapt these needs and standards in a fast-changing world.

Carmel as a community is facing some of the same problems that local, state, national and international communities face. It would be nice to know that we, as a body of people, could work together toward some of the social woes and divorce our thinking from the "us and them" syndrome that haunts and retards eve governing body.

I'm sure Mayor Townsend has done her very best. To quote Sidney Hook, "Sometimes you have to give up something good to get something better."

Good business climate

Dear Editor:

It's an interesting commentary on the success of the current administration at city hall that at the same time some local business people are bemoaning the lack of communications between city hall and the business community, two of the finest retail outlets in Northern California have decided that the business climate in our village is just right for them to open major outlets in Carmel-by-the-Sea.

When evaluating the self-serving comments of the T-shirt entrepreneurs and nifty-gifty shop owners, for balance it is good to remember that not many communities in the West are considered of sufficient quality to attract the attention of The Nature Company and Saks Fifth Avenue — but Carmel-by-the-Sea is, and has, just this past week.

Proud of Red Cross

Dear Editor:

They stood in line waiting for help — help from representatives of the American Red Cross, a group of men and women from California, the Midwest and the South, all sent to aid the flood victims of Santa Cruz, San Benito and Santa Clara Counties.

There were volunteers experienced in every type of disaster, teaching and working side-by-side with those of us new to the disaster team. For over a week we made the daily commute to Santa Cruz and Gilroy, with side trips to Hollister and San Juan Bautista. Daily the damage assessment unit inspected the disaster sites, others made home visits to verify household needs and assist in the decision of when and if the victims return home — home to trailers and houses devastated by the flood.

Beginning at 9 a.m. until closing at 6 p.m. or until everyone had been helped, interviewers, so ably assisted by local volunteer interpreters, heard individual accounts of the disaster. Clothes and food had been destroyed by contaminated water, bedding and furniture soaked to the point of being no longer usable, rooms that had been inundated with three to four feet of water, now unfit to inhabit.

As the problems of the victims compounded, and the myriad of forms mounted, the meaning of the American Red Cross became apparent. Emergency requests for food, clothes, shelter and health services were readily filled. Day after day in the midst of laughter, tears and certainly fatigue on the part of both victims and the disaster team, the work continued on. Twelve hour days were a common occurence.

Some of us from the Carmel Chapter of the Red Cross were privileged to serve and be a part of this experience — a part of a group of wonderfully devoted people.

We are proud to belong to a service organization of such magnitude as the American Red Cross.

Freedom of choice

Dear Editor:

During this 1986 election year, we are reminded of one of our country's greatest freedoms, namely freedom of choice. Typically, we think of this as the freedom to vote for our favorite candidates.

In recent coverage of the Carmel mayoral race, your newspaper challenged other freedoms of choice. These included freedom to invite whomever we wish to speak at a candidates forum, freedom to register with one party rather than another or none at all, and the freedom to spend our money any way we choose, including a campaign poll.

Surely, the Pine Cone needs a lesson on the American Way!

Along with freedom of choice, I'm especially grateful for freedom of speech!

Will Village be same?

Dear Editor:

Will our feisty, "not for progress" mayor herein get her man, one way or the other? Will our hero be forced to simply saddle up and amble out of town at sunset? Will the village ever be the same after this election?

First of all, the village is a city, which is in fact a business in itself. It is in the service business and employs a good number of people. It makes money and spends a fair amount. When you have a single budget line item hovering around $100,000 per year to cover litigation for less than 4,700 people in what is being touted as a friendly, quiet village by the incumbent mayor, I think most folks would say you have a major business problem.

The City of Carmel will never be the way it was five or 10 years ago. It could not be the way it was even a year ago, but who is really for that? Additional stiff taxes would have to be paid by residents just to keep up with the litigation if no businesses were located here. Additionally, what should we do for basic necessities, travel to Monterey for a pound of coffee and a loaf of bread?

We will always have guests visit this area of the Pacific coast. For the mayor to say she is not for any progress when we already have the people problem is like spouting, "I know there is a problem, but I'm not going to give it my attention. Perhaps it will go away."

What has happened to Carmel has happened to other communities across this land. A small group of self-described saviors take it upon themselves to decide what is right and wrong, good or bad for the rest of us and literally shut us out.

The embarrassment this administration has caused our community based on their almost un-American standards for fair play along with just and equal treatment rips at the very threads of democracy we lovers of freedom have always defended.

I'm not for Mr. Eastwood just because I believe he can do the job that needs to be done and bring the people together. I'm against what Ms. Townsend has done in splitting the village apart. You can't treat people that way and get away with it for long Madam Mayor. Thank goodness for the two-year term.

Days of Our Lives

Dear Editor:

Certain members of the city council of Carmel should be absolutely ashamed of their conduct during the March 4 council meeting. With very serious issues facing Carmel, from water usage to the lack of parking, the last thing that is needed is the turning of council meetings into reruns of "Days of Our Lives."

Will Charlotte be asked to the block party? What deep dark secret keeps David Maradei from getting a date for that afternoon? Perhaps after April 8, they won't have to worry about the other pressing items. Stay tuned, folks!

Businessman on council

Dear Editor:

It has come to my attention that one of the candidates in the coming election stated on a recent radio interview on one of the local stations that "There are no business people on the city council."

That is not true. I have been in business in Carmel since Feb. 23, 1968.

I hold Carmel business license No. 5935, which has been renewed annually since that date.

Opposition mounts against Sen. Wilson's plans for federalization of Big Sur

By MICHAEL GARDNER

FIFTH DISTRICT Supervisor Karin Strasser Kauffman and the Big Sur Land Trust have joined in the growing opposition to Republican U.S. Sen. Pete Wilson's plans to federalize Big Sur.

Strasser Kauffman and Brian Steen, executive director of the Big Sur Land Trust, told the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook Tuesday that upon extensive reading of the legislation, they cannot support the bill as presently drafted.

Their opposition to the bill in its present form can be added to the very vocal complaints registered by the Friends of the Big Sur Coast, which went on record as being against the proposal the moment the legislation was announced by Wilson last week.

Similar legislation introduced by Congressman Leon Panetta (D-Carmel Valley) and co-sponsored by California Democratic Sen. Alan Cranston was defeated in the U.S. Senate in 1980 at the urging of then California state Sen. S. I. Hayakawa, a Republican.

Meanwhile, the Monterey County Board of Supervisiors will conduct a public hearing on proposed amendments to the Big Sur Land Use Plan (LUP) at 10 a.m. Tuesday, March 18. The amendments are recommended by the Coastal Commission, which is expected to certify the plan in April.

Wilson's legislation, which is a separate issue from the LUP amendments, basically:

- Designates Big Sur as a National Forest Scenic Area. The boundaries would generally be from the city of Carmel to the north, San Luis Obispo County to the south and the Coastal Commission zone to the east.
- Places Big Sur under the jurisdiction of the United State Secretary of Agriculture. A paid "Big Sur Coast Trust" board will be established to raise funds for land acquisition.

Another nine-member advisory committee would be created representing the forest service, Coastal Commission, governor, supervisors from San Luis Obispo and Monterey counties, and the public.

- Stipulates that "the secretary will not have the authority to acquire lands by condemnation so long as the county's Big Sur coast land use plan remains intact.

"If the land use controls contained in the plan are significantly weakened, either by court action or amendments to the plan approved by the county or Coastal Commission, the secretary will be allowed to invoke condemnation authority to acquire any parcel of land threatened with development contrary to the values of the Big Sur coast."

- Provides for $500,000 in seed money to implement the program.

WILSON helicoptered into Big Suf and Monterey Saturday hoping to stir up support for the controversial legislation.

Throughout the day Wilson was met by protesters, from the pickets at Nepenthe to angry members of Friends of the Big Sur Coast, who blasted the senator and his legislation in a closed-door meeting at the Monterey airport.

Wilson's primary arguments in supporting the measure are that:

- The legislation provides another layer of protection for the scenic Big Sur coast, a national treasure that must be protected from development.
- The financially-strapped county needs assistance to help purchase scenic lands for permanent open space.
- A shift in county government could lead to a more pro-development attitude for the coast. With Big Sur under federal domain, the shifts in local planning policy would not adversely affect the Big Sur region.
- Offshore oil drilling will be banned along the Big Sur Coast.
- Mining and timbering activities will be greatly restricted.

Wilson does have the support of fellow senator Cranston. Kam Kuwater, Cranston's press secretary, said, "He is a co-sponsor of the bill. He's very happy to work with Sen. Wilson on it. It's very helpful when both senators are trying to push it through."

Assemblyman Sam Farr (D-Carmel) also appears to be supportive of the legislation.

"My general policy is that anything that we can do to enhance the protection of Big Sur is a positive step forward," he said.

A key provision in the bill is federal fundraising attempts to assist in acquisition of open space, Farr said.

"I don't think the county has, or ever will have, adequate resources to manage the vast acreage," he said.

Thus far, Wilson has failed to win the favor of many community leaders.

The general points of opposition to the bill are:

- That federalization would spell the end of local control.
- Property rights would be compromised and the federal government would assume control of private lands without just compensation.
- By placing Big Sur under the jurisdiction of the federal Secretary of Agriculture, the region is susceptible to policy changes when new administrations are elected. They fear that a pro-development administration could name a secretary with the environmental awareness of a James Watt.

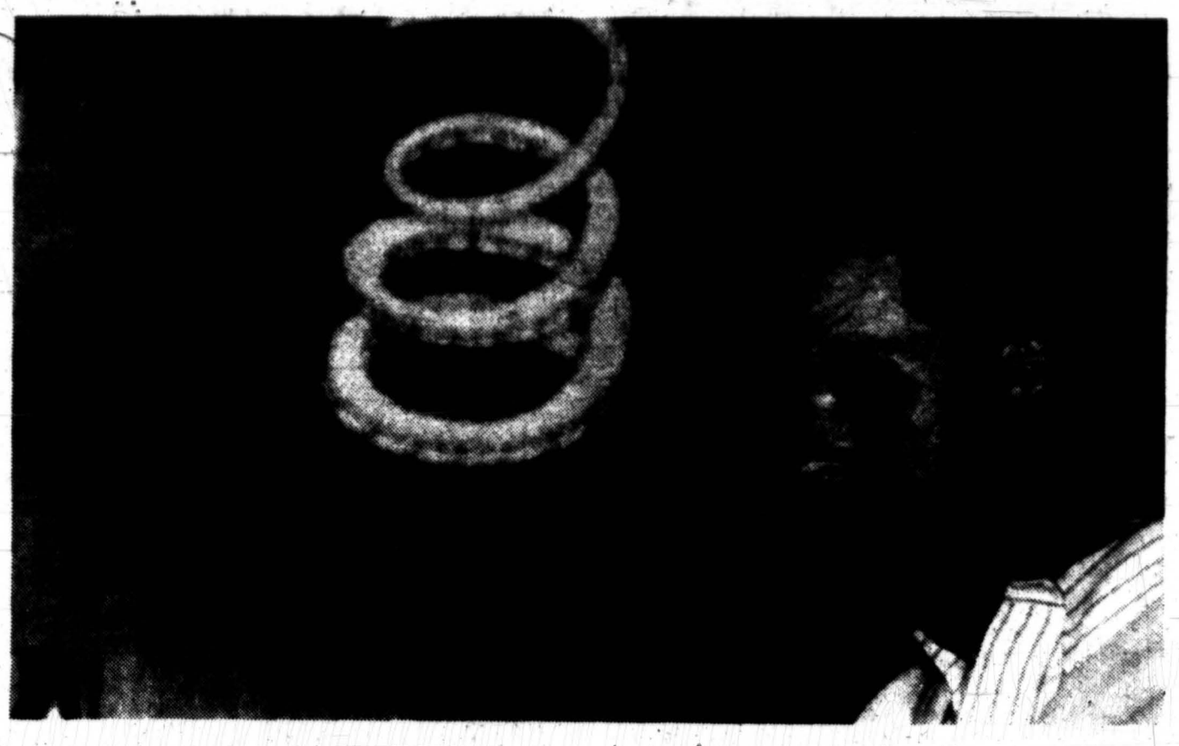
ON SATURDAY, the Big Sur Foundation and Strasser Kauffman withheld judgment on the legislation until further studies.

But Tuesday Strasser Kauffman, who represents Big Sur, expressed outrage that neither the county nor Coastal Commission were consulted before the legislation was introduced.

"The legislation was introduced in a vacuum with no attention to proper review or details. After reading the legislation I think I know why we didn't get a chance to see it," she said.

Strasser Kauffman called the language in the legislation "unacceptable" and "heavy-handed."

She especially opposes the section that would grant the secretary condemnation rights — a hot issue that is entirely deleted



SENATOR PETE Wilson, with a "Don't tread on me" flag hanging in the background, met with local citizens trying to drum up support for his legislation to federalize Big Sur. However, so far Wilson's measure has been roundly denounced by Big Sur residents and Fifth District Supervisor Karin Strasser Kauffman. (Holly McFarland photo.)

Reclamation plant study supports CSD project

By NANCY HILLS

THE MONTEREY Peninsula Water Management District board officially learned at its March 10 meeting that the long-awaited water reclamation plant comparison study will be released this week.

The City of Carmel-by-the-Sea sent its regrets and asked for a continuance of its water allocation presentation which was scheduled for that night. The board did, however, hear presentations by the city of Monterey and Del Rey Oaks on their water allocation policies. The board also accepted its 1985 annual report and discussed its insurance problems.

Bruce Buel, water district general manager, informed the board that a report by consultant Frank Dryden comparing water reclamation projects would be officially released to the public Friday, March 14. The water district steering committee will review the report at 2 p.m. Friday, March 21 at the Environmental Health meeting room at the Monterey County Courthouse.

The report states that a Carmel Sanitary District project for approximately $11.3 million was more cost effective than a plant proposed by Pebble Beach Community Services District, which Dryden estimates would cost approximately $12.7 million.

The report estimates that yearly operation of the CSD plant would cost $1.3 million, while operation of the Pebble Beach plant would cost an estimated $1.6 million annually. According to the report, both plants could provide the 656 ac. ft. per year of reclaimed water needed by Del Monte Forest golf courses.

The golf courses currently are irrigated by drinking water which could be reallocated to peninsula cities and parts of Monterey County within the water district if reclaimed water is used instead.

Though the CSD plant has a larger capacity, it would cost less because it already has personnel and some facilities in place. The PBCSD plant would have to be built from the ground up.

The City of Carmel asked for a rescheduling of its presentation due to the illness of Brian Roseth, Carmel staff planner, who was to give the report to the water board. Carmel representatives will appear at the April 14 water board meeting.

The city of Monterey, however, was represented by Haywood Norton, planning services manager for advanced planning, who told the board that the Monterey City Council passed a water allocation ordinance the night before.

Having found it had only 884 ac. ft. of its annual 5,650 ac. ft. water allotment left, the city council readjusted its water priorities. Outstanding building permits which already have water alloted to them would leave the city with only 408 ac. ft. when completed.

When all planned developments within the Monterey city are finished, the city will be left with 275 ac. ft. of water, Norton said.

The ordinance passed by the Monterey City Council, Norton said, sets aside 114 ac. ft. as an unallocated reserve.

The reserve is for water uses the city cannot plan for.

"The city has no control over tourism," Norton said. "For instance, if all existing hotels have an increase of five percent in occupancy, it will increase water usuage by 46 ac. ft."

How many people decide to come into town from surrounding areas is also unpredictable, Norton said.

Norwood said that the use of Monterey's water allocation did "sneak up pretty fast" as did a 38 percent increase in the number of hotels in the city. The city will continue its present policy of a moratorium on hotel construction, Norwood added. The staff also was instructed by the city council to look into businesses retrofitting with water-saving devices when remodeling, he explained.

Study session on Carmel's parking situation March 15

By MICHAEL GARDNER

THE CARMEL City Council is hoping to make some progress on the long-stalled Sunset Center parking facility proposal and also open discussion on a possible shuttle bus service.

The council will discuss the parking facility and shuttle bus proposals during a special session at 9 a.m. Saturday, March 15 at Carmel City Hall.

The city for years has had under consideration a plan to build either a two- or three-tier parking garage and roof-top park on the north field of Sunset Center.

Cost of the project will depend on the size and timing of construction. The general maximum figure is estimated at about $5 million for approximately 300 spaces.

Those who urge caution on the project point out that the garage would provide only an additional 150 more parking spaces since about 125 to 150 vehicles now are parked in the unpaved lot.

There is also some question whether commuters will use the facility if they have to pay to park.

But supporters of the facility point to Carmel's parking problem and continual resident support of the projects to justify the expense.

Keynote speaker at the session will be Carl Anderson, who works for the city of Monterey.

Anderson will discuss that city's experiences with its municipal parking garages, including the issues of:

- How the projects are financed. The success of bond sales and parking district assessments also may be addressed.
- The free shuttle bus from the municipal garages to the Monterey Bay Aquarium. Included will be costs and how well the shuttle service helped minimize traffic in the Cannery Row area.
- Best methods of collecting fees, such as parking meters or employees stationed at guard gates.
- Whether the city leases spaces for long terms, such as to businesses on a monthly basis. If so, what is the popularity of the lease program?
- Revenue versus costs of construction and maintenance.
- The internal workings of the project, including space location and access points.
- The effects a parking structure has on the traffic patterns surrounding the facility. For example, once constructed does the facility draw such a large number of vehicles to dramatically increase traffic in the neighborhood?
- What kind of police problems — such as crime and vandalism — are there in and near the parking garage?

A second topic will be council review of the preliminary traffic data gathered as part of the master environmental assessment.

A representative of Wilbur Smith and Associates, which conducted the survey, will explain the preliminary results.

The parking meeting is expected to draw an especially large crowd since it is one of the key issues in the April 8 election.

The Saturday session, which is expected to conclude at about noon, is open to the public. No action will be taken.

"simply do not exist."

"Ninety-five percent of the business people in the community have the good of the community at heart...Any dramatic change would be a disaster for Carmel. They know this," he said.

Fischer refers to the present incumbents as a "dynasty."

"I would like to see this dynasty now in city hall removed," he said.

Fischer also voiced opposition to the current policy of closing Scenic Road parking one-half hour after sunset.

"It's taking it away from me and making it a private driveway. I don't like that," he said.

WOOLWORTH, a former planning commissioner who unsuccessfully bid for council 10 years ago, has been a resident of Carmel since 1953.

"Bob stole some of my thunder and it was a very good speech," she said in following Fischer's talk.

Woolworth said the so-called "Hatfield and McCoy" type of feud between the city and business is just imaginary.

"Carmel is full of would-be writers. I took a few courses myself and conflict is emphasized, ' she said, getting a good laugh from the audience.

BOB FISCHER

Woolworth, citing her long-term residency, said, "I have a handle on all present problems and prospects and I know what led up to them."

Woolworth plans to keep "solutions in scale" with the size of Carmel. She wants to retain "our uniqueness and beauty" by allowing growth only as "a matter of infilling, replacement and repair...We don't want to kill the goose that laid the golden egg, so to speak."

Woolworth's most recent public service was sitting on the General Plan Advisory Committee.

Lampson, a correctional officer at Soledad prison, is making his first bid for elected office and his nervousness at public speaking showed.

When taking the mike, he apologized for "stage fright," but then went through it like a real trouper, making some distinct points.

For one, he reversed his previous support of closing the Pebble Beach gate at North San Antonio Street. Lampson said Highway 68 was partially closed during the recent storms and then it became apparent to him how important the gate is, especially in an emergency.

Lampson said he seeks office because of the "high-handed attitude" of the council in its legal actions.

"The main thing to do is lighten up and try to get along with people and talk to people. You can get a lot further that way than with an attorney."

Lampson proposes that the terms of the council, now four years, should be shortened to two years, which would "make city government a lot more responsible."

Elinor Laiolo, a retired school administrator and property owner for about 12 years in town, is seeking election to council.

The wife of former Mayor Barney Laiolo, she said she had no intentions of seeking office until friends urged her to do so when they read a newspaper article speculating that she may be a candidate.

"I'm here simply because of the power of the press," she said.

LAIOLO SAID now that she is retired "I do have some time to serve the city."

Speaking just briefly, Laiolo questioned why the city council has refused to participate in the special dam assessment district, which she claims could preclude Carmel residents from receiving any benefit from a new reservoir on the Carmel River. (See related story, this issue.)

In closing, Laiolo said she will take an oath to preserve and defend the constitution, which means that "every council meeting will begin with the pledge of allegiance to the flag of our country. This has not happened in four years and that is a sad note for Carmel."

Candidate Weber attended the meeting, but left before it was his turn to speak. Asked why he left, Weber said he was not given notice that he would have to speak.

He said a friend called him and woke him up to tell him about the meeting.

Weber, who is 21 years old and a member of the Environmentalist Party, describes himself as an "environmental poet."

INCUMBENT Councilman Maradei did not attend the session because he said he has to "maintain a distance and a dignity" between his public service and his duties as station manager at the Carmel Post Office.

Maradei is afraid that the post office would come under criticism for any remarks he would make at what he called a "partisan forum" for a "special interest group."

"I can't bring the post office in a bad light...What comes first is the postal service. It's a question of ethics," he said.

Maradei has served on the council since 1982 after a stint with the forestry commission. He is a nine-year resident of Carmel.

Mayoral candidates also spoke at the forum.

Incumbent Charlotte Townsend spent her time discussing the water issue.

"As business people I think of you as being interested in the facts," said Townsend, who has served two, two-year terms as mayor. She currently is the city's representative to the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District Board of Directors.

"To imagine there is a simple answer is not only naive, it is dangerous," she said of the Carmel River dam issue.

For example, Townsend cited a Marin County $40 million dam that was pushed through hurriedly and now — because of river flow requirements established by the state for steelhead — "they have less water than they did before they built the dam."

ELINOR LAIOLO

DON LAMPSON

The Carmel River dam is probably "the most complicated and least understood" of the election issues, Townsend said, raising a 160-page water board agenda.

She said the dam has to obtain permits from nine different government agencies. Another 16 entities have statutory rights and

THE DAM project is an "exasperating" process that must proceed with "care and caution," Townsend said.

The water board is "aggressively pursuing the dam" but "we will not sacrifice quality and efficency for speed," she said.

Townsend concluded by again labeling Eastwood as a pro-business candidate. "Just look at his vigorous supporters to see where his true interests lie."

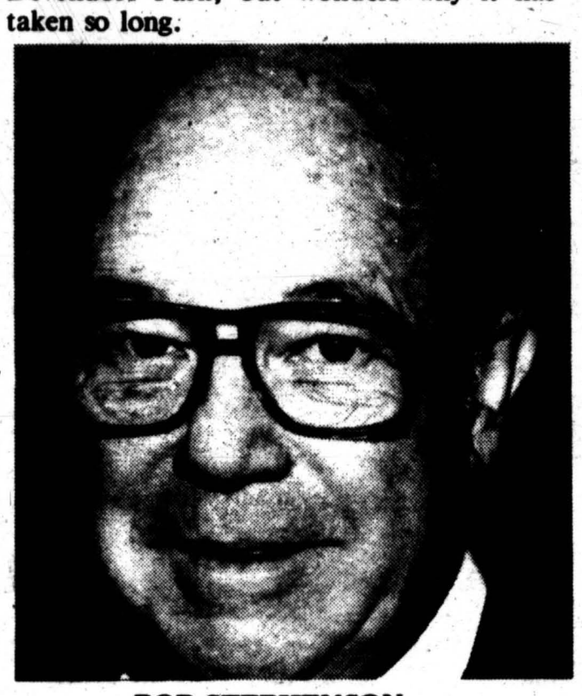
Eastwood, following Townsend, is making his first effort at elected public office. A world-famous movie actor, produced and owner of a film production company, Eastwood has lived in Carmel for 14 years.

Eastwood took the opportunity to chide the mayor and council for projects still uncompleted.

"The mayor has stated that the most often asked question is 'Where is the Hog's Breath?'," said Eastwood, part owner of the San Carlos Street restaurant.

"That is not true...The most asked question is 'Where are the bathrooms?'," said Eastwood, in reference to continual council discussion about building public restrooms.

Eastwood admitted that the council has authorized plans for public restrooms at Devendorf Park, but wonders why it has taken so long.



BOB STEPHENSON

"That's fabulous, but I think it should have been done years ago," he said.

He made the same point with the Sunset Center parking garage proposal.

"How long are we going to have to wait? How long are we going to have to re-elect them?" Eastwood challenged.

Eastwood said he will "bring fiscal responsibility" to a council that is composed of members "who haven't the experience of meeting a payroll."

The council's investigation into the legality of closing the North San Antonio Street gate to Pebble Beach "just cost us a lot of money," Eastwood said, urging instead that "cooperation and negotiation" are better tacts.

Eastwood said he would participate in the dam process so that Carmel citizens can reap the benefits of a new water supply.

"Instead of studying this with our neighbors, we're suing our neighbors," he said.

Eastwood closed with his continual campaign argument that the business community has been treated "like second-class citizens."

Directly addressing the CBA, he said, "You're the ones who can really help us solve the problems. They cannot be solved by residents alone. We must work together."

TIM GRADY, a member of the Environmentalist Party, is seeking to become Carmel's mayor after an unsuccessful bid last summer for the Carmel Unified School District Board of Education.

Grady wants to push a land use policy that is compatible with nature, rather than the existing practice of "destroying wildlife."

"Technology never goes back an inch to wildlife," he said. "The technocrats have sold out to the developers."

Grady called the rehabilitation of Carmel Beach "hypocritical" because nature should be allowed to work there without human interference.

He called the erosion "natural" and claimed that those attempting to alter the beach are just "leeching our money."

Instead, Grady said the city should allocate its resources to buy Mission Ranch and the Odello East Ranch to start community organic farms.

Grady also said if he is elected one of the barns at Mission Ranch could be used for local artists to sell their works.

And the Carmel City Council "should be the vanguard of environmental issues" and use its position to lobby for pro-conservation policies on the state and national level, Grady added.

Businessman Paul Laub, who just moved into town weeks before filing, also wants to replace Townsend as mayor of Carmel.

In his brief address, Laub ran through a series of proposals.

Laub promised to put additional parking at the Carmel Foundation, including handicapped spaces he claims the city refuses to provide.

He said the city should have traded the Gamble estate for a hotel to provide additional senior citizen housing.

"The city has not been maintaining properly all of the streets and sidewalks," he complained.

He also wants more youth programs offered by the city, which he claims is "nil."

A new attitude would be ushered in at city hall if he is elected, Laub said.

"I would like to treat everybody ike the way we would like to be treated," he said.

On parking, Laub said he would push to buy the Hodges property near Carmel Mission for a lot. Visitors then could be shuttled to town. He also favors construction of the Sunset Center parking garage.

Laub wants to start a senior aide program at city hall so citizens in need can obtain help, such as a ride to the doctor.

AFTER THE talks, CBA members were given a few minutes for questions.

A question posed to the mayoral candidates asked what kind of business they would like to see open in Carmel.

Townsend replied "quality shops...The type that make Carmel a special place."

Eastwood preferred to say that the present council discourages business that wants to open here. For example, Eastwood claimed that closing the gate to Pebble Beach would keep away potential customers.

Laub responded, "I believe in free enterprise...If Leonardo Da Vinci came here today and wanted to open an art gallery he wouldn't get into Carmel."

Grady said he wants to encourage the type of business that is "harmonious with the earth."

ANNE WOOLWORTH

On the ice cream issue, Eastwood said the council has a "killjoy mentality...Next it will be apple pie, then ban mom."

But the mayor said the decision not to allow a new ice cream parlor in town had nothing to do with ice cream cones.

She said the issue is a "classic example of the power of the media," which reported nationally that Carmel "banned" ice cream cones.

She said the issue was mostly "restrooms, parking, litter and water."

The mayor reminded the CBA about the summer free ice cream "lick in" that drew many residents and city officials.

Planning Commission

Nature Co. may occupy Sprouse-Reitz space

By NANCY HILLS

TELESCOPES, TRAIL maps and looking glasses are a few of the items the Carmel Planning Commission will be reviewing at its meeting at 4 p.m. Wednesday, March 19 at Carmel City Council chambers.

These items are a part of the merchandise offered by Berkeley-based Nature Company's use permit application for one of two retail spaces created out of a division of the vacated Sprouse-Reitz Variety Store on the north side of Ocean Avenue near Mission Street.

The Nature Company is the second retailer to apply for a permit to move into one of two spaces created by businessman Roxy Rapp and architect George Brook-Kothlow from approximatley 6,000 sq. ft. commercial area that comprises the first floor of the Wermuth Building. Sprouse-Reitz left the location in December and the first applicant, Books, Inc., moved into one of the spaces in February.

Nature Company was described by Steven Friedland, assistant to the company president Tom Wruble, as a retail store with items "related to nature and natural history." The company, founded by Wruble and his then-wife Priscilla in 1973, has 10 stores located primarily in the San Francisco Bay Area, as well as a catalogue department.

The planning commission will review March 26 a new plan by a Nature Company architect to remodel the exterior of the building. An exterior design submitted by Brook-Kothlow was rejected by the planning commission in January as out of context with the surrounding buildings.

Wruble explained that the space on Ocean Avenue has enough room to allow every product line Nature Company carries including a "bookstore with the largest selection of natural history titles in America," a section of natural history art and prints, optics — including binoculars and telescopes, adult field tools for observing nature, a "very small clothing section," childern's toys and games and "other objects inspired by the natural world."

The company does not carry anything that was living and taken from nature — not even shells, Wruble said.

"Why the need to possess natural things?" Wruble asked. "We provide alternatives such as replicas, prints and maps to tell you where to go to see nature, but we ask you to please leave it there after you see it."

Wruble explained that the company will do nothing until it receives city approval. If the planning commission approves the permit, Wruble said that the store would not open before June 1 and realistically not until June 15.

"Our stores don't open automatically," Wruble explained. "We probably spend more time on the environment of a store than any other retailer. We have also proposed a complete redesign of the exterior and I think it is going to be beautiful."

THE PLANNING commission will also review:

• An application to expand Talbot Ties on Ocean Avenue by 200 sq. ft.

• An application for Great Things Antiques on Lincoln Avenue to expand into a vacant shop next door.

AT&T rainout, repairs all taxed youth center budget

By MICHAEL GARDNER

THE FINANCIAL crisis at the Carmel Youth Center was prompted by a rainout at the AT&T golf tournament, major repair and renovation projects, additional staff costs and some inexperience by the board of directors, according to President Merv Sutton.

Sutton, who was out of town two weeks ago when Director Carole Colter revealed the center's financial problems, basically supported Colter's statements and gave her a vote of confidence.

The financial problems could be discussed when the board meets Wednesday, March 19 at the youth center. A new board of directors is expected to be elected at that time.

In an interview with the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook, Sutton's main points were:

- That the youth center lost approximately $20,000 in anticipated income when the AT&T Golf Tournament was cancelled after three rounds of play.
- That program and staff expenses jumped because in past years there were few activities for the youth members and only one full-time paid person to supervise.
- That the board will keep the youth center open. There are enough funds available to pay the bills through April. At worst, the hours of the center will be slashed.
- Fund-raising activities will begin immediately and past events pushed harder. The annual Easter Sunday pancake breakfast offered in conjunction with the Carmel Lion's Club will be widely publicized.
- The city of Carmel will be apprached for assistance.
- That the new board taking office last year was inexperienced and made some judgment errors while concerning itself more with whipping the center into shape than about the bank account balance.
- That the new board was forced to spend $24,000 to repair the facility and another $7,000 to upgrade the Bingmobiles, which are rented to groups for concessions at major events.
- That because of the 1984 dissension on the board, the center did not receive a dime from the Bing Crosby Youth Fund when in past years the donation was in the thousands of dollars.
- That Colter is doing a "fine job" and the blame for the problems should be placed on the inexperience of the board rather than her.
- That because of some problems over paperwork at SCRAMP, the Laguna Seca organization has turned over a profitable concession to the California Highway Patrol. The center had a $12,000 contract to provide food to the other concessionaires at the races.

THE FORMER board, most of whom resigned or chose not to seek re-election amidst controversy last year, left a bank account of $70,442, Sutton said.

But most of that quickly dwindled when the new board had to pay for the repairs to the center and Bingmobiles.

"It was really in bad condition when we took over the youth center. It was a mess," Sutton said.

"We decided that if we had to build the youth center up from zero we would make it a clean desirable place to be," he continued.

Sutton said the bill to repair the youth center would have been closer to $40,000 rather than the $24,000 actual cost, but many of the board and parents volunteered labor and some materials.

Staff costs also chipped away at the reserves, Sutton said.

The youth center budget for staff salaries in the past was: $31,000 in 1982, $34,000 in 1983 and $23,000 in 1984, Sutton said.

In 1985, the new board committed itself to paying for two full-time staff members to be on duty at all times. The decision cost the center $51,000 in paychecks in 1985.

Of that, Colter receives $1,800 monthly and the other full-time employee, Mary Jane Cherry, is paid $6.50 per hour, Sutton said.

A full-time maintenance person was hired and spent most of his time rehabilitating the Bingmobiles. Hé and several other part-time helpers were laid off in budget cutting moves earlier this year.

The extra staff helped keep the Youth Center open more, but earlier this year the hours were trimmed after the layoffs.

Because of the additional programs the activity budget more than tripled under the new board, according to Sutton.

The activities budget in 1985 was $6,000 compared to $1,800 in 1984, $2,200 in 1983 and $2,785 in 1982.

Insurance costs also skyrocketed, increasing by $8,000, Sutton said.

But despite the problems, the youth center board in January was confident because of the upcoming AT&T (formerly the Crosby) golf tournament in Pebble Beach. The event usually nets the center about $50,000 annually.

However, the inclement weather kept attendance to a minimum and a day was lost to rain.

At previous tournaments, Pepsi provided free soft drinks for sale. But, because the Coca-Cola Co. had bought sponsorhip to the tournament, the center had to buy the beverages for more than $2,000.

SUTTON DOES not blame Colter for the fiscal problems. Rather it is just the result of circumstances.

"I really do think she's doing a good job. I think it's unfortunate that the board couldn't give her a lot of guidance. If anything, it is my fault, I'm the president," he said.

"We just didn't give her good enough guidance," Sutton added.

Sutton said the new board was inexperienced and concentrated more on rebuilding the membership, which has increased from about two dozen to more than 125 this past year, than on funds.

"We planned to spend that money," he said in reference to the $70,000 left by the old board. "It was a do-or-die situation from the day we took over. Why have a big bank account if you can't make it?"

Sutton said he has no plans of letting the youth center close its doors.

"I don't think there's a chance of closing," he said.

The executive board has met five times in two weeks to plot fund-raising activities.

Plans include the Easter pancake breakfast, contacting alumni for donations, and grant applications. The board also has written the Bing Crosby Youth Fund requesting a $17,775 grant.

In addition, the board has entered preliminary talks with the city of Carmel about the city taking over the maintenance and insurance responsibilities.

There are those, including members of the former board, who question the wisdom of the expenditures.

Jim Kalber, one of the few remaining members of the old board still serving, said the youth center offered activities and programs for young people.

As for the financial difficulties, he said the old board left the new members "with more money than even they knew what to do with."

BUT KARL Pallastrini, vice principal of Carmel Middle School, believes that the youth center has support.

"It's really helped us out because it gives the kids a place to go after school. We're out at 2:30 p.m. We're in favor of anything that gives the kids structured activities."

The middle school has had several successful dances at the youth center.

"I see the youth center and the city recreation program as both picking up the activities the district can no longer provide. I feel the reponsibility has to belong to more than the school district," Pallastrini said.

Pallastrini wants the community to "pull together" and support the youth center.

"We must do everything we can as a community to save the youth center. It cannot be something that goes the way of Kip's Meat Market or Hilbert's Creamery (two former popular businesses)," he pointed out.

And school district Supt. Bob Infelise called the youth center facility "fantastic."

"Anything I can do to support it I will as an individual and as a representative of the school district," Infelise said.

Mid Valley Fire Chief Barrett killed in automobile accident

JAMES BARRETT was caught in a heavy downpour as he manuevered the pickup truck down Pacheco Pass on his way to the Mid-Carmel Valley Fire Department.

He had just finished a weekend visit with his wife and two children and was commuting back to his job as fire chief, a position he assumed on Valentine's Day.

Come summertime, when the children were out of school, the family would be moved into a new Carmel Valley home. Meanwhile, he lived at the fire station across from Carmelo School and commuted home weekends.

It was about 6:30 on a Monday morning, the 10th of February. Rain had pounded much of the central state that night and throughout the early morning hours. Traffic was light.

Suddenly, a few yards ahead a large truck driven by Gary Foster of Soquel inexplicably drifted into the westbound lane and slammed into a compact car with a still unidentified family on board.

The truck, loaded with cheese products from the Alum Rock Cheese Co. of San Jose, plowed through the Chevrolet Nova and then smashed into Barrett's pickup as he tried to veer away.

Barrett and the family of three were pronounced dead on the scene, just a quarter mile from Casa de Fruta on Highway 152. Foster remains in critical condition in a San Jose hospital.

In a tragic few seconds, Pacheco Pass had claimed four more lives to add to the more than 130 fatalities on the books.

Barrett, a friendly man with a firm handshake and easy-going smile, had just been introduced to the community at a barbeque last Saturday afternoon at the fire station.

It was a happy time; the turmoil of the past year over a threatened volunteer walkout had ended with the introduction of a new board. All seemed well.

Today, Barrett's death has stunned the Valley and those who had just begun to know him. Immediately, the flag in front of the station was lowered to half-mast.

A mourning board of directors in an emergency session that night named Capt. Jim Smith as its acting chief. Lynn Caldwell, acting chief until Barrett was hired, had resigned last week. The board will meet March 19 to discuss recruitment procedures.

Barrett leaves behind his wife Sharon and two children, Nicole and Brandon. He was formerly chief of the Turlock Rural Fire Department.

Funeral services are scheduled for 2:30 p.m. Thursday, March 13 at the First Presbyterian Church in Turlock.

The Mid-Valley Fire Protection District volunteers have established a memorial fund for Barrett's family. Contributions may be sent to the volunteers, 8455 Carmel Valley Road, Carmel, Ca. 93923.

Criticism mounts against federalization of Big Sur

from the LUP in favor of a more equitable transfer of development credit policy.

"It's not our intent to condemn land. Our goal is to protect the land and provide just compensation," she said.

Local control is another issue, she said.

"We are going to be governed from Washington with a whole new bureaucracy beyond our control," she said. "The overall effect is to take local control away."

Strasser Kauffman added that she and board Chairman Sam Karas will meet with county and Coastal Commission staff to analyze the legislation. Full public hearings also will be conducted before the board of supervisors adopts a formal position.

The Big Sur Land Trust on Tuesday announced that its members cannot support the legislation as presently written. Many trust members had met with Wilson Saturday afternoon and then convened as a full board two days later to discuss a position.

In a carefully-worded statement, Steen said a key issue is "equal control."

"Essentially the protection of the coast can be met only through development of public policies that provide equal control for local, state and national interests and not have the overriding control by the federal government," Steen said.

Steen added that the trust may support legislation if the measure would meet three conditions:

- "Coordination of all federal, state and local agencies by a representational entity which has adequate authority to uphold and implement the county Big Sur LUP.
- "(A) representational entity should be a partnership which assures freedom from political change.
- "Provide an adequate funding mechanism to implement the land use plan."

Carmel High Principal Feldeisen asks to be assistant principal

THE CARMEL Unified Schol District Board of Education Tuesday afternoon accepted Carmel High School Principal Joe Feldeisen's request to return next year as the school's assistant principal.

The board when it meets March 18 is expected to approve a plan to launch an extensive search for a new principal for the high school. Feldeisen's reassignment is effective at the close of the school year.

Feldeisen had assumed the principalship when Marsha Kading-Kelly resigned a year ago. Kading-Kelly recently told the board she does not plan to return to the district.

Feldeisen's resignation — coupled with the earlier announcement by former administrator Rich Hawkins that he will not return to the district — provides Infelise with an opportunity to juggle some of the central office staff.

Infelise will propose a reorganization to the board in April. He did say that he does not plan to hire another central office administrator to replace Hawkins.

Feldeisen's reassignment also places in doubt two other positions in the district.

Current CHS Assistant Principal Dee Dresser formerly held that position at the middle school. When she replaced Feldeisen at the high school last year, her slot at the middle school was filled by Karl Pallastrini, formerly of the Pacific Grove school district.

If Dresser returns to the middle school, a position needs to be found for Pallastrini. He does have an agreement with Pacific Grove to return, but that district intends for him to return as a teacher.

Correction

A HEADLINE in the March 6 Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook incorrectly stated that "Rosie's Bridge just fine say Valley residents."

In fact, the residents at a special information meeting voted by a two-thirds majority in support of the facility on Esquiline Road to replace Rosie's Bridge.

We regret the error.

FRANKLIN FEDERAL TAX-FREE INCOME FUND

8.28% Current Annualized Yield*

16.56% Equivalent Taxable Yield

Today, every penny counts. Now make sure they add up. This Fund invests exclusively in municipal bonds, which makes the income 100% free of Federal income taxes.

For example, if you're in the maximum tax bracket, you pay the Federal government $500 of every $1,000 earned from a fully taxable investment. When you invest in this Fund, you can keep the whole $1,000. † So, a yield of 8.28% equivalent to a taxable yield of 16.56% for investors in the maximum Federal tax bracket. The Fund pays monthly dividends.

*Current yield based upon an annualization of the monthly dividends paid by the Fund since Mar. 6, 1986 and the offering price on xxxxxxx xx, xxxx. The Fund uses a commonly accepted accounting principle known as equalization. The Fund's yield varies with changes in dividends paid and the offering price. The value of your investment at redemption may be more or less than your coast.

BEHIND THE LINES
BY MICHAEL GARDNER

Forums, have we got forums!

CARMEL CITY Council candidates must feel like the understudy who practices all day long only to have the star shine at night.

Well, council candidates, you no longer have to be in the shadow of perhaps the most publicized small town mayoral race in history.

The League of Women Voters of the Monterey Peninsula has scheduled a candidates forum for 7:30 to 10 p.m. Wednesday, March 26 in Carpenter Hall at Sunset Center.

But invitations have been mailed only to the eight council candidates; mayoral candidates will not be part of this forum.

Hopefully, this will also stave off the media hungry for quotes and pictures of Tim Grady! Sorry, just kidding. We know who they're after and he won't be there, so stay away so the locals have room to sit down!

For those of you who want to hear the mayoral candidates, tune in to KMST-46 TV from 9 to 10 p.m., Monday, March 31. This event is co-sponsored by the league.

In addition, the Carmel Citizens Committee has invited registered voters to attend its forum for all candidates. The event is planned for 7 p.m. March 18 in the lower hall at the All Saints' Episcopal Church, Ninth Avenue and Lincoln Street.

HAVE I GOT A SCOOP FOR YOU

Councilwoman Helen Arnold had a bone, or should I say cone, to pick with Eastwood over his remarks about the council and its anti-ice cream decisions.

Arnold has voted in favor of the ice cream parlor applications each time and she wanted to make darn sure Eastwood knew it.

To emphasize her point, Arnold presented Eastwood with an ice cream cone after the council meeting March 4.

By eavesdropping I didn't catch all of the conversation, but I think I heard Eastwood politely turn down the cone, saying he prefers pistachio.

The cone actually was a pencil hidden in plastic shaped liked ice cream. The cone was one of several bought by prankster and City Administrator Doug Schmitz at a toy store during the height of the summer ice cream controversy.

KNOCK KNOCK! WHO'S THERE?

Speaking of Schmitz, if he had been home last Thursday night he would have been in for one heck of a surprise.

Seems that mayoral candidate Clint Eastwood lost his way to a neighborhood get-together for him and council hopeful Elinor Laiolo over at the home of Bruce Roberts.

EASTWOOD, lost in the darkness of the neighborhood, knocked on a door seeking directions.

The house belongs to Schmitz, who wasn't home at the time.

I could just see Schmitz' face if he had answered the door and Eastwood said, "Make my night!" (Sorry Doonesbury, I just had to steal that line.)

But I'm sure — aren't you? — that Schmitz would have told Eastwood exactly where to go if he had been home, though! No, not there, Roberts' place.

And where was our good city administrator at the time?

Our spies placed him at the Velvet Creamery in Del Monte Center with wife Carmela Bowns and two children enjoying an ice cream sundae!

NO ESCAPE FOR DAVE

Neither rain, sleet or snow shall stop Carmel postal employees from their ribbing of boss and council candidate David Maradei.

Since these guys realized their whistling was out of tune, someone snuck a new tape into the Muzak at the post office.

Before long, tunes from Play Misty For Me, Hang 'Em High and High Plains Drifter serenaded Maradei, who is one of eight candidates for city council.

For those uncultured clowns, the films starred Eastwood, our local celebrity turned would-be politican. Eastwood, if you haven't heard, wants to be mayor of this town.

Aren't you relieved that I refrained from any spaghetti western prose like "he wants to be town marshall?"

ARE CELEBS TAKING OVER?

A popular cartoon strip down at city hall these days is a recent Sunday Beetle Bailey by Mort Walker.

The scene is Sarge, Beetle and Killer watching television. The conversation follows:

Beetle: "Ted Koppel is really sharp."

Killer: "He sure seems to know a lot."

Beetle: "Why doesn't he run for office?"

Killer: "I still like Walter Cronkite."

Beetle: "Okay, Cronkite for president and Koppel for vice-president."

Killer: "And Charlton Heston for secretary of state."

Beetle: "Telly Savalas for attorney general."

Killer: "And Charles Bronson for secretary of defense."

Sarge: "Knock it off! You guys are being stupid! What would happen to this country if we started putting show-biz guys in power?"

If I have to explain the joke to you, you've been reading the funnie too much and the news sections too little.

Onward.

THE NUMBERS GAME

If nothing else, Eastwood's candidacy has stirred a politically apathetic community.

In the 1984 elections, only 864 of the 3,604 registered voters cast ballots. At that time there was only one challenger to the council and Mayor Charlotte Townsend ran unopposed.

This year, county elections office has reported 3,849 registered voters as of March 3.

Local prediction is that you can add another 300 names on top of that 3,849 figure after the March 10 registration deadline. Final figures will be available March 14.

Carmel Recreation Program comes in under its budget

THE CARMEL Recreation Program cost the city $2,781 to serve 309 participants.

That is according to Doug Schmitz, who presented the council with a brief update on the program's financial reports March 4.

Schmitz noted that the total expenses for the program from September through January amounted to $19,753 — below the original $20,000 budget.

Of that, the city recouped $16,972 through user fees, which means the actual cost to the city for running the program was $2,781, Schmitz reported.

Activities camp and karate were the most popular programs, Schmitz said.

The program, which is continuing through this spring, also offers art classes and dance for youngsters.

Evening basketball and volleyball activities are open to adults.

Recreation Supervisor Steve Taylor, in a memorandum to the council, said enrollment is on a "steady increase" and that the payback through fees makes the program an "unqualified success."

The council accepted the report without comment.

The March 6 meeting of the council was rather short, lasting just over an hour.

In other action the council:

• Denied a request from Robert Coffin to expand the allowable site coverage by 5 percent to allow for solar collectors. The council referred the overall issue of site coverage for solar collectors to the planning commission for review.

• Appointed Councilman David Maradei as its representative to the Association of Monterey Bay Area Governments (AMBAG).

• Authorized spending $6,400 to participate in an area-wide origin and destination traffic study.

• Authorized sending a letter to Gov. George Deukmejian urging he oppose the federal Outer Continental Shelf Oil and Gas Leasing Program.

• Denied a request by Scenic Road residents that they be given permit parking for evening parties. The city bans parking on Scenic Road one-half hour after sunset.

Students from Carmel area schools win awards at speech, drama fest

The festival drew students from grades six through 12 who attend public and private schools throughout Monterey County. Designed to encourage participation in and appreciation of speech and drama, the fourth festival took place at Fort Ord's Fitch Middle School.

Ribbons were distributed in several categories for performances deemed good, excellent and — the highest rating — superior.

Thirteen students represented Carmel High School this year. The group received a superior rating for its Reader's Theater presentation. Superior ribbons also went to Aaron Ross for impromptu speaking and to Shanna Murphy for solo acting.

Ratings of excellent went to Carmel High's Jimmee Greco for thematic reading and Heather and Stacey Arnold for duet acting. Excellent solo acting awards each went to Regis De Barros, Eileen Chow and Lisa Morris. Stacey Wing contributed to the group's superior rating in Reader's Theater.

Jennie Alexander and Mollie Bettiga, both Carmel Middle School students, received a rating of superior in duet acting.

Junipero Serra School of Carmel took a superior award for Reader's Theater. Jessica Poiner of Junipero Serra received a superior award for solo acting and the superior award for duet acting was given to Megan Greco and Meredith Smith, also of Junipero Serra School.

More than 100 volunteer judges rated the performances. Students were judged according to choice of selection, oral technique, characterization, body language and other qualities. The festival is sponsored by the Monterey County Office of Education.

Carmel school sponsors were Diana Hardy of Carmel High School, Jo Brazell of Carmel Middle School and Nikki Greco of Junipero Serra School.

MAKING CARMEL BETTER KNOWN

An illustrated booklet, to be published in he interests of Carmel, is in a state of preparation. The Pine Cone has undertaken this enterprise, prompted by suggestions received from residents who are willing to assist in its financing. They believe that inasmuch as Carmel is not a business community — in its strict sense — their interests will be best served by those who reside here. All manner of paid outside publicity should be avoided.

EDITORIAL
WHAT, MORE POLICEMEN?

For some time past the commissioner of police has been laying the groundwork for a request of another full-time officer for the department. We are not yet prepared to say that such an addition is necessary — nor are we prepared to deny it, but we do maintain that the burden of proof is on the police commissioner. Large generalizations as to traffic, and what may happen if and when the Carmel-San Simeon highway opens cannot be accepted as proof.

The department has put on one extra man in the past year. A careful scrutiny of the monthly report of the police department over a period of time does not show any very considerable increase in the activities of the department. If they are doing more than is shown in the reports, then by all means the reports should be framed to give a truer picture.

COUNCIL APPROVES ART COMMISSION'S PROPOSAL FOR "CULTURAL NOISES"

New sounds may issue from an old source soon, when Carmel's Forest Theater becomes the location for a proposed series of Sunday afternoon events based on the arts.

The sounds will not be loud, according to assurances to the Carmel City Council, who heard the plans last night, but they will be very cultural.

Glen E. Kearns, a member of the Carmel Arts Commission, obtained the enthusiastic permission of the council to stage the programs every Sunday from 1:00 to 4:00 o'clock. He said plans call for some performances on stage and displays of arts and crafts on the theater's low arena fronting the stage.

Asked if the events will be noisy, Kearns said yes, some sound would be necessary. Councilmen hurriedly reminded one another that sound had been drifting from the theater area for years and after all, that's what it had been built for.

NO SMOKING LAW PASSED

If smoke gets in your eyes, relief may be just an ordinance away.

Carmel's ordinance No. 76-1, sponsored by Councilman Mike Brown, was passed by a four to one vote at the March 3 city council meeting. Councilman Gunnar Norberg cast the dissenting vote.

The bill, which goes into effect in 30 days, defines smoking to include the carrying or lighting of any type of cigar, pipe or cigarette.

Smoking will be prohibited in elevators generally open to the public, and in all waiting rooms of health care facilities, both public and private. However, any health care facility desiring to do so, may set up a separate waiting room in which smoking is permitted.

Businesses and offices open to the general public will have the option to ban smoking if they choose. Any business or office owner or manager may voluntarily post signs prohibiting smoking on the premises.

PLANS FOR BATHROOMS IN PARK ARE SCUTTLED

Toilets for tourists got flushed down the drain Monday, March 9, when the Carmel City Council unanimously dropped its earlier plans for constructing public restrooms in Devendorf Park.

The council acted after mounting public pressure from residents and the Carmel Forestry Commission, which had called a special meeting before the council meeting to "give guidance" to the council on its wishes.

The decision reversed the council's original plans to construct both a bus station and public restrooms in the downtown city park. City staff had already met with six architectual firms and had planned for one to be selected at the council meeting Monday.

CITY OF CARMEL-BY-THE-SEA
CITY COUNCIL
ORDINANCE NO. 86-6
AN ORDINANCE PROHIBITING OUTDOOR RESTAURANT SEATING IN THE COMMERCIAL LAND USE DISTRICTS UNTIL ADEQUATE STANDARDS ARE ADOPTED.

WHEREAS, the City has been faced with an increasing number of requests or changes in outdoor restaurant seating; and

WHEREAS, the Land Use Code contains no specific standards for review of outdoor restaurant seating; and

WHEREAS, without adequate standards, the basis upon which the Planning Commission reviews such applications and the conditions upon which such applications should be approved is difficult to assess; and

WHEREAS, this deficiency creates confusion and frustration for the Planning Commission, applicants, and the public; and

WHEREAS, the Department of Community Planning and Building has in its six-month program the revision of commercial design regulations including standards for outdoor restaurant seating; and

WHEREAS, the scope of the proposed standards for outdoor restaurant seating include consideration of hours of operation, permanency of fixtures, use of umbrellas, pedestrian flow, use of outdoor space, consistency with General Plan policy P1-4 and objective 01-3, and consistency with Municipal Code Sections 17.12.010 and 17.12.220 and the cumulative effect.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED that the City Council of the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea does:

1. Prohibit the creation of any new expansion, or change in existing outdoor restaurant seating until adequate standards for review have been adopted.

2. That nothing in this ordinance would inhibit the continued operation of existing restaurant seating as previously authorized by the City.

3. If any part of this ordinance is found unenforceable, such findings shall not affect the enforceability of any other part.

4. This ordinance shall take effect thirty (30) days after final adoption.

PASSED AND ADOPTED by the City Council of the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea this 4th day of March, 1986, by the following roll call vote:

Happy St. Paddy's Day!

ARE YOU ready for green beer, Irish coffee, and "Kiss me, I'm Irish" buttons?

You'd better be because St. Patrick's Day is almost upon us, that's Monday, March 17 if you didn't know (and shame on you if you didn't!). There will be events all over the peninsula celebrating the feast day of St. Patrick, the patron saint of Ireland, but a few do stand out.

The Irish group Shanachie, the Monterey Pipe Band, the Groove Merchants and the rock group Young Presidents — quite an eclectic collection — get together for a St. Paddy's Day bash from 5 p.m. to midnight at the Hyatt Regency Monterey. All this is a benefit for the Special Olympics of Monterey County.

TWA, co-sponsors of the event, has donated a week's vacation for two as a prize; green beer, green daiquiris, green popcorn; a Blarney Stone and leprechauns; as well as great door prizes, top the evening's highlights. The event is co-sponsored by KMBY radio and KSBW TV.

Funds raised will benefit Special Olympics, which will hold its annual area games April 19 at Monterey Peninsula College.

For more information contact the Hyatt at 372-1234.

Carmel Foundation has an ongoing need for volunteers to go grocery shopping and volunteer drivers for various trips in the area. The foundation performs a wide scope of volunteer services and Carmel residents benefit from these volunteer directed activities. More information is available by calling the Volunteers in Action.

SYMPHONY GUILD'S SYMPHONIE d'ELEGANCE

Flyways and runways take on new meaning as preparations for the 25th "Symphonie d'Elegance" luncheon and fashion show Thursday, March 20, get underway. The Monterey County Symphony Guild benefit at the Hyatt Regency Monterey chaired by Mrs. Howard F. Healey, will feature designer fashions courtesy of Saks Fifth Avenue.

Twenty Symphony Guild models will each shift into five changes to give the spectators 100 different outfits to feast their eyes on. Daytime, evening, travel, classic knits, at home and sportswear from several prominent designers are to be shown through the cooperation of Robert Nastasi of Saks Fifth Avenue.

For reservations and information contact Mrs. Robert F. McFarren, 624-3957 or Mrs. John A. Andrews, Jr., symphony guild president.

The fashion show necessitates a change in the preview of the March 23, 24 and 25 Monterey County Symphony concerts conducted by Maestro Clark E. Suttle, to a morning coffee at 10 a.m. Wednesday, March 19, at the Community Church of the Monterey Peninsula, one mile off Highway 1 on Carmel Valley Road.

BUSINESS BEAT
BY NANCY HILLS

The ice man returneth

GUESS WHAT, folks?! A new business application has been submitted to the Carmel planning department. You know what it's for? An ice cream parlor. Oh yeah, fasten your seat belts because this little controversy may be in for a return engagement.

The application, which will be reviewed by the planning commission in April (after the election), was filed by none other than William Lawson, the former owner of the late Swensen's Ice Cream Parlor on Ocean Avenue that closed last September. That space is now a part of JJ's shoe store. Lawson is applying to put an ice cream store in Harold Wamsley's barber shop on San Carlos Street near Ocean Avenue.

It gets better. According to Lawson, he apparently has worked the numbers out so the ice cream parlor will use less water than the barber shop.

For those who don't remember or weren't around, the last ice cream parlor application, Carmel Creamery, was denied last year because it would have used more water than the clothing store that previously had occupied the same commercial space. In Carmel, a business coming into a commercial space cannot use more water than the business moving out of that location.

The controversy, which received nationwide media attention, started when the Carmel Planning Commission land use committee recommended that the Carmel Creamery application be approved sans the sale of ice cream cones. Uncovered takeout food is illegal in Carmel. Ice cream cones were deemed uncovered takeout. Because of the potential litter problem, cones were found to be a hazard to the health and welfare of the town. Many people interpreted this law as a ban on ice cream cones in Carmel, and found themselves either hotly for or against the idea.

Lawson said the new ice cream shop will not be a Swensen's franchise but will have the same ice cream he sold before.

MERV SUTTON and wife Nancie, right, owners of Nielsen Brothers Market in Carmel, were two of the business owners invited to a special showing of a Weston photography exhibit March 6 at the Monterey Peninsula Museum of Art to honor businesses that supported the museum. The Sutton's attended the affair with Lacy Fain, left, of Carmel. (Michael Gardner photo.)

Lawson has an ice cream production plant in Seaside where he made the ice for his Swensen's in Carmel.

Because of the smaller square footage of the barbershop, Lawson said this one will be completely takeout — no room for seating.

That means all the sundaes, milkshakes, ice cream cones, and pints and quarts of ice cream will be takeout. How that all will jibe with the takeout food ordinance remains to be seen.

Lawson said he still has an active business license for an ice cream parlor, complete with ice cream cones, but Carmel Planning Director Diane White said the business license is not the issue the planning commission will deal with, but whether or not the parlor is an appropriate use of the land.

Lawson said he has been looking for a place that could meet the city water requirements ever since he learned his lease would not be renewed at the Swensen's location. After Swensen's closed, he said he has been supporting himself as a restaurant equipment maintenance man.

RICHARD SHIELDS, foreground, and Patrick Martin of A Moveable Feast catering service gave everyone a taste of the good life at the Monterey Peninsula Museum of Art Thursday, March 6. The event was to honor businesses that have supported the museum during the past year and a preview of the Edward Weston photography show. (Michael Gardner photo.)

Wamsley said he is not leaving Carmel, he's been here 30 years and just "wants to work less." He plans to reopen somewhere on San Carlos Street after taking some time off, but not quite so near the central commercial district.

"They're getting an ice cream parlor just like they had and a barbershop just like they had. They're not going to lose anything," Wamsley said.

Though Lawson wanted to get his application before the commission this month, White said it was filed after the deadline for the Feb. 24 land use committee meeting. The committee, which meets the last Monday of every month, must review and make recommendations on land use applications before they come to the planning commission.

Which, of course, means that the land use committee will review this ice cream parlor on March 31, a week before the city election. Stay tuned.

NEW OWNER, NEW OFFICE

Carmel resident and attorney Robert D'Isidoro not only has a new office, but a new building here in Carmel. D'Isidoro recently purchased the Grunion Run restaurant property on the south side of Fourth Avenue bordered by Mission and San Carlos streets. Once that was done, he moved his general law practice from Salinas to Carmel. His new office is on Mission Street between Sixth and Fifth avenues (next to Katy's Place).

D'Isidoro said he will be submitting plans for Grunion Run to the city, which he hopes will come before the planning commission this month. Whatever he puts in there, D'Isidoro said it will be in keeping with the zoning requirements for the city. Right now, he plans on a combination of retail and offices. Re-opening the restaurant isn't in his plans and definitely not part of the zoning in that area.

NOT AN ILLUSION

How time flies when... Anyway, time has flown for Kristin Markus Strain, part-owner of Illusions of Grandeur. Strain owns the company with her husband Jeffrey and another partner, Jack Carney. It's been about a year since I first reported in this column about her starting a theme party planning service. At the time she was located on Carmel Rancho Lane; now she is in Carmel, upstairs on the corner of Mission Street and Ocean Avenue.

Illusions of Grandeur may sound like your last date, but actually it's the name of Strain's business. She creates any kind of atmosphere the client desires for a day or evening of mixing and mingling with friends, business associates or relatives (none of which is mutually exclusive, hopefully).

Strain arranges theme parties for hotels and groups. Illusions of Grandeur doesn't do any catering, but if you want Hollywood (her most popular, she says), a Mardis Gras, enchanted forest (complete with fog machine) or a nautical extavaganza, Strain said her company has the stuff to pull it off.

Right now, she has about 15 themes on hand, but will create any type of party a client desires (except bachelor parties — no ladies in the cakes, please), and she can take on the party from invitation to clean up. The largest party Illusions has handled is 750 people; a group of 20 was the smallest.

TIMELY STITCHES

For those who create with a needle and thread or are thinking about giving it a try, Sharon Brown and Dorothy Williams have a new place for you.

A Stitch In Tyme, I'm told by the two ladies, sells everything from big to small items for needlework and sewing. They also have some notions for sewing, but no fabric.

They sell Elna sewing machines (coming at the end of the month), Knitking knitting machines, knitting needles, imported European yarns and all kinds of things for cross-stitching, smocking and needlepoint. Both private and group lessons are available for people who don't understand a word of what I'm writing about.

Both women have been working out of their homes for about four or five years, Brown said, and decided it was time to get a place of their own.

New owners are Jan and Bob Kramer from St. Louis, who are carrying on from former owners Lucille and Joe McNeer.

The shop, Jan Kramer said, has an "extensive selection of greeting cards, office supplies, stationery and gifts." The only change, she added, will be an increase in gift selections. They may also start an art supplies section and adding more travel items.

Before moving here in January, Jan Kramer conducted incentive and motivation seminars and husband Bob was a president of a hotel management company.

UNCROSSED

Remember Steve and Susan Croswell? Former owners of Orange Julius on the corner of Mission Street and Ocean Avenue? Next door to Swensen's ice cream parlor? Closed a couple of months after Swensen's? Its location is now also a part of JJ's shoe store.

Well, they haven't returned to Carmel or Orange Julius, but have returned to serving food. This time it's in Carmel Valley at Mid-Valley Shopping Center.

The Croswells bought the Dutch Windmill, a coffee shop in the shopping center, from Bert and Cora DeGroot. They changed it to Steve and Susan's Corner Cafe, so it's a franchise. Their own food is featured with homemade cakes and pies, hamburgers, soups, salads and all those things that make up a cafe. That includes "tube steaks." Oh yes, the Croswells are bringing hot dogs into Carmel Valley.

"And they're loving it," he said.

Are the Croswells happy?

"Oh yes, and we're not gonna be run out of Mid-Valley," he said. Croswell said he feels that the city ran his franchise out of town.

But they do miss Carmel quite a bit, Croswell added. They miss people coming in, talking about the town and being in the center of things.

Croswell is even volunteering at the Carmel Valley Fire Department, an activity he used to do with Carmel's fire department, so he's settling in all right.

ANOTHER FAN DOWN

The Sports Fan upstairs in Paradise Mall on the corner of Dolores Street and Ocean Avenue has closed. Its owner, "Link" Lindquist, tried last year to get the planning commission to allow him to replace the sports-related clothing and "fan gear" with soft (fabric) sculptures. He also wanted to change the name of the shop to The Magic If. Lindquist has another store of that name and merchandise in San Francisco.

ATTORNEY AND Carmel resident Robert D'Isidoro has purchased the Grunion Run property on Fourth Avenue between Mission and San Carlos streets and moved his offices from Salinas to Carmel. (Michael Gardner photo.)

The application was denied, as it was construed as an art gallery/gifts and a change in use. Retail sales on a second-story is not allowed by municipal code, so The Sports Fan was a non-conforming use. As such, it couldn't increase the use or make a major change in the merchandise.

After that attempt, Lindquist asked the city if he could put in an expanded line of clothing and accessories. That was denied for the same reasons. The new merchandise was too different from what was described by the business license.

So Lindquist, who said when he was dealing with the city that there were not enough customers here for the purely sports fan type of merchandise, decided to move out when his lease ran out.

Paul Laub, owner of Paradise Mall (and Carmel mayoral candidate) has temporarily taken over the space with T-shirts and fur jackets (you figure the combo out). Laub said he is looking for another tenant.

The Monterey Peninsula Museum of Art honored its business supporters Thursday, March 6 with an evening preview of its Edward Weston show honoring the 100th anniversary of the famed photographer's birth.

A list of Carmel and Carmel Valley businesses that have given support to the museum includes Ashley Travel Agency, Mediterranean Market, The Mitchell Group (real estate), Village Travel, The Pasta Palate, appraiser Mark Louis Weseloh, Nielsen Brothers Market, Millard, Tourangeau, Fisher & Morris, Tarola's Fine Gifts, Josephus Daniels Gallery, Gerry B. McFarland, Carmel branch Wells Fargo Bank, Brown-Spaulding & Associates, Weston Gallery, Key Magazine, Apger, Paik, Jennings & Dunlap, Bob McGinnis Travel, Prudential-Bache Securities, Law Offices of Robert W. Tuttle, Quail & Thistle, A Moveable Feast, Design 1 Environments, and Talbott Vineyards.

The occasion, attended by approximately 200 people, was catered by Carmel Valley-based A Moveable Feast and many of the businesses listed provided "in kind" services and products for the museum.

Mary Green, of The Mitchell Group and coordinator of the business and professional supporters of the museum, said more than $15,000 in money or products has been donated to the museum since last July by the peninsula business community.

The Golden Years

By Myles Williams

At the turn of the century, senior citizens — those 65 years of age and older — constituted just four percent of the American population. Today they make up about 12 percent. The figure is expected to be 13 percent by the year 2000 and an incredible 21 percent by the year 2030.

According to a report of the President's Council of Economic Advisors, the most important source of support for the majority of the country's older citizens is Social Security, which accounts for about 40 percent of retirees' income. Second is the 25 percent provided by their own assets, including savings and investments. Third in importance is private pensions. Only one-fourth of the work force was covered by pensions in 1950; today half of all American workers have them.

CONSCIENCE OF CARMEL

BY GUNNAR NORBERG

Saving Carmel for posterity

There's a lot of talk in Carmel these days about the candidacy of a famous actor, Clint Eastwood, for the position of mayor. And much of the talk suggests that the election of Clint Eastwood would be a great calamity. But I'm not yet completely convinced. There is still a great big IF in my mind. And I'll try to tell you why.

First of all, let me try to point out something very important about Carmel-by-the-Sea — something which used to be very clear to most everybody. And the "everybody" I'm talking about here included the people in business, who then also mostly lived inside the city limits. It also included people from everywhere in the country and everywhere in the world, who were so situated that they could freely choose the ideal place in which to live. And finally — and most importantly — there were the creative people in the arts; in music, in painting, in sculpture, in literature, and in the theater.

The theater, in fact, was the arts area in which all the kinds of people I've mentioned found a common focus and in which most all of them took some part — the business people, the well-to-do residents, and the creative spirits in the arts some of whom had trouble just keeping body and soul together long enough to strive, while trying to reach some magnificent goal.

In the years when the name and fame of Carmel-by-the-Sea was spreading across the country and far beyond, the place was full of sometime actors, sometime playwrights, sometime directors who were variously storekeepers, bankers, plumbers, carpenters, clerks, servants, the idle rich, the earnest poor, the dreamers, the doers, the already famous, the famous-to-be, the happy-just-to-be-here.

When the outdoor Forest Theater opened in 1910, tiny Carmel became the first community in the state to establish such a theater. And the founder was Herbert Heron, a professional actor who became the guiding light in the Forest Theater, for decades. By the 1920s the activities in the Forest Theater had attracted world-wide attention.

Heron also dedicated much time and effort to city affairs and in the 1930s, he served as Carmel's mayor. Back in January I wrote an article saying what qualities I believed Carmel City Council members ideally should have, and I concluded that it was Herbert Heron who, more than any other, best met those qualities: intelligence, wisdom, and vision.

Here, I simply want to point out that it was Heron, an actor, who also became a standout in Carmel's city affairs.

Getting back now to that big "if" in my mind about Clint Eastwood as a possible Carmel mayor, it is clear that there is no good reason here to say that he might be objectionable just because he is an actor. But, unlike the mix of people who worked-lived-and-acted here in the all-but-forgotten past, some sophisticates and pseudo-sophisticates nowadays all too often equate the man with the parts he plays. And that is, of course, nonsense. Nevertheless what's the real man and what's the actor can be confusing to the movie viewer who only sees and hears Clint Eastwood in the roles he portrays on the screen.

Since Eastwood isn't just any ordinary movie actor, but instead one who is famous on a world-wide scale, some Carmelites believe that the constant media attention which an Eastwood-in-the-city hall, could bring unwanted hordes to an already overcrowded town. This could, however, turn out to be only a temporary phenomenon, lasting only as long as the novelty of it all would begin to wear off.

The real "if" about having a world-famous figure sitting in the mayor's seat, would have most to do with the way in which that figure would perform while in the key position in the city's government.

This would have to do specifically with the attitude he would take with regard to long-established Carmel traditions. Heading the list of such traditions, would be the intent of the frequently quoted purpose clause (or preamble) which has stood at the head of all city zoning-and-planning law ever since 1929.

That purpose clause says that Carmel is predominantly and primarily "a residential city in which business and commerce have been, are now, and are proposed to be in the future subordinated to its residential character." And Eastwood has said that he agrees with this — but at the same time he feels that the members of the business community have been undeservedly treated like "second-class citizens," even though they put big tax revenue into city coffers.

This sort of complaint from the business community has grown through the years, for a very simple reason: more and more of the merchants have ceased to be residents (and thus voters) and many of them nowadays take little except what might be called 9-to-5 or "cash register" interest in city affairs. Meanwhile they, and their customers, disturb the peace-and-quiet, which residents value, while more and more residentially-useful businesses are forced out by the high rents which tourist-oriented shops can afford, and thus more and more residents become increasingly irritated.

Most residents feel that burgeoning business has been well able to take good care of its interests even without any bowing or bending in its direction by city hall. In addition, a good many residents, have felt and continue to feel that city councils have not so zoned that some needed residentially-useful businesses would be able to survive.

The "if" in the minds of many resident voters as to whether or not to vote for Eastwood, therefore probably still remains an unresolved "if."

There is a direction in which the great fame of a Carmel Mayor could be an enormous advantage. That direction, a very difficult one, could lead to what I've called "saving Carmel for posterity." The Carmel to be saved, in my view, should include the areas adjacent to the existing city, both up the valley and down the coast. In a letter to the editor, Nathaniel Owings, who headed the giant architectural firm of Skidmore, Owings, and Merrill, and who lived in Big Sur, deplored the argument in a series of articles on population growth potentials which seemed to suggest such growth here was "inevitable, even desirable." Here's more of what he wrote:

"We should not be mesmerized by hit-and-run developers. We should ban tract housing, plastic supermarkets, monster interchanges and super highways. We should keep our defense up on open fields, our farms, ranches, hills and dales, shorelines and estuaries. We should be building roadblocks not removing them. It's our air, water, and sanity we cherish... In a happy acrimonious way we are uniquely self-sufficient... Let us enrich what we have."

Much of what Owings suggested would require special legislation at the state level. Back in 1971 in a special supplement to the Pine Cone (March 4), I wrote about what the paper called "The Norberg Plan for a Heritage City."

At various times the idea has been before committees of the legislature. Once a consultant to one such committee took 40 pages to say why it would be practically impossible to create such a city even though he admitted "Carmel is no doubt a unique and beautiful area, unlike any other in California."

The idea is based on the premise that man should be able to establish a human sanctuary for himself here and there — and the Carmel area seemed to me an ideal first such sanctuary. If society survives I'm sure that human sanctuary sites, a hundred years from now, will be as commonplace as bird sanctuaries and wildlife sanctuaries are today.

I have no idea whether Clint Eastwood would ever consider such an sanctuary-city status for Carmel-by-the-Sea and adjacent areas. But if he did and if he should become mayor of Carmel, the idea would stand an enormously greater chance of realization if it were to be presented by a world-renowned Eastwood.

The "if" about whether or not to vote for Eastwood would certainly be resolved in his favor for such voters as have endorsed the Heritage City idea, but their numbers would probably be too small to make any difference in the election result. However his sponsorship of that idea could be the means to do what I and many others have called "saving Carmel for posterity," which would certainly be a most worthy achievement!

CARMEL VOICE

BY SAM SALERNO

Palm Springs life

Back from three days in Palm Springs where the new Maxims Hotel opened with much hoopla and fanfare. This is the one built by Eddie DeBartolo, owner of the San Francisco 49ers, located in downtown Palm Springs on Palm Canyon Drive. On hand for the festivities were Liberace, Pierre Cardin, ZaZa Gabor, et al. Some of the locals there complaining that the hotel obstructs their view of the mountains, but the business community likes the influx of traffic which promote tourism and dollars. Also takes away from business in Palm Desert, where the "action" has been the past couple of years. It's adjacent to O'Donnell's Golf Course, oldest in Palm Springs.

Speaking of Palm Springs, Bobby Harris, formerly of this area, in for a couple days, seen hitting balls at Rancho and conducting some business here. He's a former school teacher in Seaside, who now delves into real estate. Quite a good sticker and one time a factor at Del Monte with all the great "sticks" there.

HERE AND THERE

Mario Simic of Simic Galleries, opening a new gallery in La Jolla in mid-April. He surely gets around!

Chez David has returned to his old stomping grounds, Carmel. Seems we just bid him adieu. Chez said, "There was too much snow on the grounds in Aberdeen, Scotland, and I couldn't get used to seven blankets at night." We told you, Chez, there is no place like Carmel. Everyone who leaves, eventually returns.

Ed Haber and his staff should be complimented in offering one of the best facilities for golf anywhere. The course is a delight to play with championship greens and manicured fairways. Never a poor lie. If I had my druthers, it would be the one I'd play every day.

Met a beautiful couple from La Jolla a few days back, Julie and Jamie Wills. Jamie is a marketing consultant for C.W. Clark, Inc. and was here to visit friends. We wish them well in the land of matrimony.

Pepperdine University chosen numero uno in the nation for its size and curriculum. The big question is this. After one attends grammar and high school in Carmel, then matriculates to Pepperdine at Malibu, where is the next move, heaven?

Peter Incaviglia of Monterey and Oklahoma State, most impressive at spring training in Florida for the Texas Rangers. Peter set an NCAA record for home runs and many critics were skeptical that he couldn't hit homers with a wooden bat after using a metal bat in college. Well, recently, he hit a homer in training that put a one-inch hole in the plywood fence in left field. The critics better take heed, this kid will make it "big" in the majors. He's worked many years (with his dad's help) to achieve this status. Good luck, Pete!

Hart Mansion in Pacific Grove, formerly Maison Begerac, now under new management with Christian Frederiksen, maitre 'd and Henry Winkle, chef de cuisine. Treat your palate to an elegant meal, you won't regret it.

A great turn out at Carpenter Hall for Bob Fischer this past Sunday with food and libations for all those who attended. Bob was happy with the "quality" group who gave of their Sunday afternoon to chat with the candidate for city council. Music was furnished by Dave Clay who tickled the ivories and Ron Blair, whose ballads have been heard around here for many years. Clay can be seen and heard Sunday and Tuesday at the Monterey Plaza Hotel. Ron, on the other hand, is still freelancing and doing ocassional "gigs" around town. His lovely wife, Pat, was also on hand. Marion Fischer, and her group of helpers put on a first class political soiree.

P.T. Reavis, TWA pilot, seen sloshing through the fairways at MPCC after our recent rains. Revis entertained Bob Carlile of Pebble Beach. They both chatted with Bill Schuyler, former part-owner of KMST-TV, who is building a new TV station in Sacramento, KSCH, Channel 58.

Leon Ishmael, former disc-jockey at KRML, in town from Reno where he is employed at KOLO, Channel 8. Accompanying him and was a cute little thing from that same channel, Gigi Koury. They drove all night just to breathe the fresh air of Carmel and take in a jaunt to Palo Colorado Canyon and Big Sur.

EXPANDING THEIR HORIZON

Glenn Erickson about to open a "biggie" in Salinas. Monterey Discount Golf and Tennis is opening another store which will be 7,500 square feet in size. They will occupy the old Bank of America Building on Main Street. Best to you Glenn and Dave! Keep swinging.

Wayne Smith and his lovely wife, Roberta, two Fresno transplants, ecstatic about registering to vote for the big election. He wouldn't divulge his preference but I think he is an Eastwood fan and so is his wife. Wayne has taken over the bar operation at Rancho since Ken Farnsworth's death.

Speaking of the election, don't you loathe the TV reports on the election and how the editors have chopped up the interviews with Eastwood and others? Why must they edit the interviews and bring in the spaghetti western music, Clint shooting a gun, and squinting? Also, having Charlotte answer one of his questions or statements when she never appeared in the interview in the first place. The film editors are taking legal license to butcher up an interview. I think the interviews should be run as is and edited only for length and not with music, guns blazing and "one liners" by people who never appeared in the interview. Do you agree? Remember, April 8th. Adios...

Veteran's novel recalls his Vietnam

Ballad of the Green Berets

DAVE MAURER sits in a small shack in Carmel Valley — his carpenter-sized hands pounding each key as if it were a hammer — stroking out the memories that now seem like dreams, but were America's nightmare. It's late evening several years ago.

They had returned from the dying place, all but one. And now in ritual, they were welcomed back to life, Maurer's typewriter goes; faster now that it's his third cup of coffee.

All the images the men used to cover themselves with during their stay in the storm disappeared in the brief euphoria of the meeting. Though they smelled of sweat, dirt and dried blood, there was sweet joy in the air.

The type begins to scramble on the page. He has run out of room without noticing. His fingers ache, almost arthritic from the day-long typing. Is it worth it?

There were no tears left to cry, no fears left to hide, Maurer continues.

"The warm night breeze carried the soft dreams of childhood, memories of love and hands that cared. Hoa had given him the gift of love; his friends gave him reasons for tomorrow.

A decade later, Maurer has his answer — a semblance of internal peace derived by putting his life in The Dying Place, a just-released Dell paperback that details his experiences as a Green Beret in the Vietnam war.

The Dying Place is the story of Sam Walden, a Green Beret who carried out secret missions in Laos while at the same time former President Richard Nixon was appearing on American TV denying any knowledge of the raids.

Although Walden is fictional, Maurer molded the character after his own experiences.

Much like Walden, Maurer was of the generation weaned on John Wayne's battle call — a man who grew to know the horrid realities of real war, not Hollywood war.

Walden tried to shake the guilt. He had never felt the exhileration that some others professed to feel during an ambush. It always seemed like murder to him. It was never like the movies.

MAURER, the author, is Walden, the soldier.

He joined the army in that awkward time when adolescence is merging into adulthood; one of those lost souls of youth — not knowing or caring what the future would bring.

He thirst for newness, for a way out of the small town where life is a 9 to 5 job, a few beers and Sunday church.

It was a time when evil was touching a woman's breast; not killing seven "gooks" bathing at river's side.

It was a time when forgiveness was easily found, the preacher man said, by reciting five rosaries and a good Act of Contrition.

These are very serious sins, young man. Mortal sins. Grievous sins. Do you realize that if you died with these sins on your soul, you would go straight to hell?

"I had just turned 17. I wasn't doing anything in school. I wanted to get on with life," explained Maurer, who now lives in Carmel and makes his living as a construction worker.

"That (the army) was the only place you could go back then. Looking back at it now, I know I was just a baby. But back then I thought I was an adult," said Maurer.

Maurer joined in 1963 — before the Gulf of Tonkin resolution of August 1964 — and spent a year in Korea.

A year later, Maurer was shipped to Vietnam where he served his first tour of duty at An Khe in the Ia Driang Valley.

Like so many young Americans, he went willingly, proudly and fearlessly.

"I was intrigued by war. I had never been happier to go to war. That was the ultimate experience," Maurer said.

"I quickly changed my mind. The glory, all of that goes quickly. The minute you get involved in a firefight you realize there isn't any romance involved in it."

Maurer survived the firefights, the bombing raids and the sneak attacks to come back home a year later.

Home. No brass bands, no flag-waving youth out of school for the day and no pretty girls to kiss you hello.

It was spit in the eye and tauntings of "Baby Killer."

Maurer, still too young to legally buy a beer at the tavern, was not prepared for the culture shock. One day a firefight, the next a root beer float at the neighborhood drug store.

"I had come from a fox hole to home in a matter of a couple of days," Maurer said.

"The first day my mom and dad, they said, well, you have to get a job now."

MAURER would sit in the evenings in front of the television watching television bring the war home to America.

"I would feel guilty about being back while my friends, my peers were over there," Maurer said.

Weeks of the six o'clock news later, Maurer decided to re-enlist. The army, for the second time, offered the only way out.

But this time, Maurer went to jump school. He wanted to be something more than just a grunt on the front line.

"If I was going to be back, I wanted to be something special," he said. "I still feel I'm part of the special forces. Once in, you're always in."

The Dying Place starts where Maurer tried to pick up his life again during his tour as a Green Beret on secret "incursions" in Laos.

"I thought we weren't supposed to be in Laos?" Maurer was asked.

Maurer laughed. "Nobody told me that," he said.

ARTS & LEISURE

"We had to have people there to keep an eye on them. If nothing else, to keep those suckers honest," he said.

Laughter floated up from the tranquil setting below. Looking back down, Walden watched them wade into the cold mountain water. "They look like children." They might have been boys on a camping trip. He found it unreal that he was going to kill them.

Maurer wasn't asked how many missions he led into the jungle. You don't ask how many were killed. You ask when the idea for the book came to mind.

"You remember the first time Walden cried? At the Christmas party? That's when I

DAVE MAURER OF CARMEL writes about his experiences as a Green Beret in Vietnam in a fictionalized paperback, The Dying Place, just released by Dell Books. He joined the army at age 17, he said, because "I was intrigued by war. I had never been happier to go to war. That was the ultimate experience." Maurer's second tour of Vietnam took him on "secret incursions" into Laos. (Michael Gardner photo.)

Movie buffs unite — peninsula to sponsor film festival

By MAC McDONALD

FIRST THERE was the Carmel Bach Festival, then the Crosby, followed by the Monterey Jazz Festival, and in recent years catamaran regattas, rugby tournaments, Dixieland fests and even squid festivals. All have found their way onto calendars as true Monterey Peninsula "events."

Now organizers of the inaugural Monterey Film Festival hope to put their event's name up onto the marquee lights along with the others for what's hoped to be a long and successful run.

"We want to make it a glittery, glamorous Hollywood event," says an enthusiastic Alan Weber, festival vice president and co-owner of the Dream Theater in Monterey. "It'll be a mini-Cannes, but not a judging event. There'll be screenings, workshops and especially parties. This is going to be a peninsula-wide event."

Weber had just finished attending a meeting of the festival's board of directors, which includes such peninsula luminaries as veteran actor Morgan Stock, Monterey County Supervisors Sam Karas and Mark Del Piero, Monterey City Councilwoman Theresa Canepa, Sam Harrison of Sam Films and Joan Pease, Monterey Peninsula Chamber of Commerce director.

'Our goal is to make it a four-day spectacular; an event on the Monterey Peninsula that will excite people more than any other event.'

"Our goal," says Weber about the festival, "is to make it a four-day spectacular; an event on the Monterey Peninsula that will excite people more than any other event."

The festival itself is slated for Feb. 5-8, 1987, or as board president Stock makes the point, "After the AT&T and before the president's weekend," traditionally a slow period of the year for peninsula hotels, restuarants and other visitor-serving businesses.

Which is precisely why the board picked the dates, seeing how the festival was conceived as an economy-boosting event for the peninsula. The Monterey County Board of Supervisors even gave the festival $3,000 in seed money to get it off the ground. Organizers hope an upcoming fund-raising event in April will get the festival off to a flying start.

"The excitement is growing at an incredible rate," Weber says, as news of the four-day event is slowing reaching the public's ears and catching its fancy. "The people we're attracting are very influential and talented people. I'm actually overwhelmed at the number of people (who have volunteered)."

Although the festival is relatively unknown now and doesn't have an office, telephone or even a director yet, people from across the county have stepped forward to help. An honorary board of directors includes celebrities such as Doris Day, Clint Eastwood and Joan Fontaine — all familiar peninsula names — as well as politicians like Rep. Leon Panetta, state Sen. Henry Mello, Assemblyman Sam Farr and the mayors of virtually all of Monterey County's cities.

The festival's first fund-raising event, its coming out party, if you will — is the county premier of Akira Kurosawa's Academy Award-nominated epic, Ran, — has been set for April 17 at the Dream Theater.

"It's growing by itself," admits Weber, who has been spending most of his "spare" time organizing. "Not many people know about it, but we're ready now for...'the birth'."

Weber, who has visited other film festivals to see first-hand how they operate, including the recent Santa Barbara International Film Festival, believes the success of the festival hinges on two things:

"First, the selection of films is our first and foremost draw," he says. "Second, the celebrities and party events surrounding the festival is going to make the festival, stimulate people to attend the festival. There's something about celebrities that give people a kind of unknown excitement. It's an excitement that stays with them a long time."

Although the parties, celebrity events and klieg lights will all add a glitzy Hollywood veneer to the festival, the films themselves will be the real stars. Commercial releases, including some premiers, will top the list, but foreign films, documentaries, short films, classics, family and children films, animated films, "festival films," and films about or featuring Monterey County or its performers and celebrities, will all make the roster.

"Eclectic," says Weber when asked about the film selection. "Which leaves it open to a lot. We didn't want to commit ourselves to a lot of foreign films, but we're not saying no to anything. We'll leave it open to a variety of films."

One film that will definitely top the list is Clash by Night, a 1952 Fritz Lang film that stars Marilyn Monroe, Barbara Stanwyck and Robert Ryan and was shot almost entirely on Cannery Row.

Weber said a minimum of 15 films will be shown at various peninsula venues (including his own Dream Theater, but also including the big-chain UA theaters), with up to 25 a possibility.

Weber expects the festival, like other county "events" such as the Monterey Jazz Festival, California Rodeo, AT&T golf tournament and Carmel Bach Festival, to draw a sizable audience.

"In some ways it may be more generally attractive, because it isn't just for golfers, it isn't just for classical music lovers, it isn't just for jazz lovers. Film appeals to a much wider audience. It should be attractive to almost anyone."

As for drawing audiences from outside the county, Weber expects — and hopes for — that too.

"We'll attract 5-10,000 people conservatively," he says. "We really don't know what to anticipate. Location is the primary thing that's going to make us different than from, say, San Jose. We just want to make it exciting, successful, and running in the black."

Candide plays at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday, March 13-15 in the Performing Arts Center at Hartnell College, 156 Homestead Ave. near West Alisal Street in Salinas. Tickets are $8.50 Friday and Saturday and $7.50 Sunday through Thursday. Reservations: 375-2111 or 758-1221.

knew somebody had to write about it," Maurer said.

Maurer, who spent the better part of the past 10 years writing the book and finding a publisher, still is coming to terms with his experiences in Vietnam, America's role and the protest movement.

Thinking back, Maurer says, "I think we went in there with the best of intentions ... The American people didn't realize the way guerrila warfare works. It takes years. We would have won. It would have taken 20 years."

Maurer said commanding generals "went into the war like the Second World War. Vietnam was a totally different war."

"The only people who understood the concept of the war was the special services," he continued. Maurer said the government should have sent only special services volunteers to Vietnam. "There were a lot of special services people who would have been more than happy to go there and do what it takes to win the war."

MAURER remembers the fall of Saigon like most of us remember where we were the day President John F. Kennedy was assassinated.

"I just cried my eyes out. I couldn't believe it ... It was such a tragedy. I never would have believed we could have lost that war. It was amazing how we could win very battle and we lost the war," he said.

"The tragedy is 60,000 dead kids. That's what they, we, were. Kids," Maurer said.

Maurer's memories of Vietnam, like our memories of life, are both wonderful and maddening.

His most vibrant memory is the woman he loved; she is called Hoa in the book. He doesn't talk much of her as Maurer, but as Walden his descriptions are like sonnets.

"I no tell you I be virgin when we meet. But I can say I never make love before you.

Hoa, the comrades he cared for, the once beautiful countryside — all can coax a bittersweet smile from Maurer when he remembers.

"The bad memories only come at night," Maurer says.

"The only bad memories I have right now about it is being betrayed by our government. I'll never get over that. They put us over there. They told us to fight and win and in the end, when they wanted to finish, they said it was over and it wasn't over."

Maurer fondly recalls the Vietnamese, whom he called "the little people."

"Because of the government, I ended up betraying them. I'm sure they feel totally betrayed. It would have been better for us to die than do what we did."

Maurer has mellowed as the years go by, but he still harbors a resentment toward those who marched in peace parades and others who fled to Canada to avoid the war.

"We felt that the people who were marching were traitors ... The people who went to Canada should still be in Canada. I still feel the peace marches, the Jane Fondas, they were treason."

Maurer calls today's Rambo-genre movies "good entertainment" but he fears that the films are "really dangerous."

"It's not real ... I look at the stuff. It's so far from reality. Perhaps subconsciously it's a way of preparing the next generation like Sands of Iwo Jima with John Wayne. I looked at that and thought, my God, It's great. I was psyched."

"Jesus, you're really tired of the fighting."

"I guess I am ... I've been thinking that I've killed enough people. Too many."

"You start thinking about that s--t and it'll drive you crazy. It's a goddamn war. That's what you do. Kill people.

"If I thought it had accomplished anything, I might feel differently about it."

Gratifying concerts showcase tenor, organist

TWO VERY different concerts provided an entertaining and musically gratifying weekend.

On Saturday night tenor Robert Swensen, winner of the Carmel Music Society competition, presented what turned out to be his professional debut recital. In spite of being a totally Romantic program, there was considerable diversity. While it may not have shown everything about the young tenor we would like to know, it showed enough to suggest that he should have a satisfying career.

Swensen opened with a group of songs from Schwanengesang of Schubert, and acquitted himself well in these moody pieces. The familiar "Staendchen" was presented simply, and "Der Doppelgaenger" had excellent tonal control.

For his second section, Swensen chose a very unusual song by Liszt, Sonnet No. 104 (as in Petrarch). The original, for piano, was written in 1838-39, but Liszt later reworked it. Although the piano retains considerable importance, it is an interesting and effective piece.

The second half of the program went north, with two lovely songs by Grieg, "The Swan" and "A Dream," and two by Sibelius, including the dramatic "Black Roses." The program closed with a group of songs by Rachmaninoff, of varying quality.

Swensen shows a lot of promise; the next three or four years will be crucial to his career. Obviously, at this point, he needs all the experience he can get. His approach appears to be very solid, and he probably knows his own weaknesses better than anyone. Certainly he is aware when his control slips; he also might want to watch a certain whiteness that creeps into the voice in the upper register. The color of the lower register is, at this point, more appealing. We wish him well.

And we also wish well his very impressive young pianist, Grant Gershon. Throughout, he provided sensitive support; in the Liszt and Rachmaninoff pieces, he was called upon for some brilliant technical work which he delivered with aplomb.

Translations, or notes of some kind, in the program would certainly be helpful. This program required a knowledge of German, Italian and Russian. The best diction in the world doesn't help the listener who doesn't know the language.

CHARLES WARD was the Monarch Concert Series organist at First United Methodist Church in Pacific Grove last Sunday. His concert was especially interesting as he is a technician as well as an organist, and this is one of "his" instruments. He probably knows the organ better than anyone including the incumbent organist.

He presented a highly diversified program, ranging from Sweelinck through Buxtehude and Bach, on to Max Reger and Marcel Dupre, with some English dances and Appalachian folk hymns for garnish. All were played with style and flair. The variations on "Mein junges Leben hat ein End" of Sweelinck were charming, and two of the recently discovered chorale preludes of Sebastian Bach were very beautiful. Bach's D major Prelude and Fugue was exciting, in spite of a petulant little pipe that decided to play whether it was wanted or not.

Ward's registration was fascinating throughout. One would have to be quite an authority on historical organs to know whether or not it was all properly authentic. Authentic or not, it was effective for each piece and showed off this wonderful organ very well.

Charles Ward is organist at Calvary Presbyterian Church in San Francisco. The series will conclude on April 20, with Judy Midgley, the resident organist, in concert.

Monterey Bay Symphony names all-request repertoire

Maestro Oleg Kovalenko, music director of the Monterey Bay Symphony, has announced that Norma Jean Hodges will be the soloist for the fifth concert series of the current season. This is the all-request series scheduled for April 4 in Carmel, April 5 in Salinas, and April 6 in Monterey.

Hodges, a soprano, will sing the solo part of the Mahler Fourth Symphony.

Also by audience request, the concerts will include the Haydn Symphony Number 104 in D major, the "London Symphony."

Known to peninsula audiences for her performances with the Carmel Bach Festival and the Monterey County Symphony orchestras, Hodges has also appeared on numerous occasions outside the peninsula, notably with the Chicago, Indianapolis and Cincinnati orchestras, as well as the Los Angeles and San Francisco Civic Light Opera companies, where she performed with Alfred Drake in Kismet.

Her most recent peninsula appearances have been with I Cantori di Carmel, the American Opera Company, the Fort Ord Community Chorus in Handel's Messiah, and as guest soloist with the Monterey Bay Symphony in its pops concert at the Monterey County Fairgrounds last September. She is a graduate of the Northwestern University School of Music.

All concerts will begin at 8 p.m.

Guitarist slates concert, lessons

THIS MONTH we have a treat for those of you who play the guitar — especially beginners. Orrin Star, top folk singer and bluegrass performer, will be in town on Saturday, March 15. We have persuaded him to offer a guitar workshop (as well as the evening concert).

Star has credentials. He won the 1976 National Flatpicking Championship, has performed all over the nation, played on National Public Radio's A Prairie Home Companion, and has two albums out. But don't be intimidated — he likes people, likes to teach, and is noted for his wry sense of humor. The workshop, from 1 to 3 p.m., will cost $15; and the 8 p.m. concert will be $6 and $4. Call for reservations, space is limited.

Also this month we have our annual Art and Treasure Sale, on Saturday and Sunday, March 22 and 23. If you have items to contribute, call us at 624-7491. Any donations (tax-deductible) will be gratefully accepted.

There are still a few more days to view our colorful exhibit by artists in the Handicapped Activities Unlimited program. Highlights of the show include some unique works by prize-winning artist Sharlotte Broudy, a Carmel resident. This exhibit ends Monday, March 17.

CLIFFORD KLUGE captured Mountain Range, a 30-by-40-inch oil painting that will be exhibited in the Hall Gallery at the Pacific Grove Art Center from March 14 through April 25.

Pacific Grove Art Center exhibit embraces multiple styles, artists

HANDMADE ARTISTS' books, paintings, drawings and sculpture are embraced in a collection of exhibits opening Friday, March 14 at the Pacific Grove Art Center, 568 Lighthouse Ave., Pacific Grove.

An artists' reception is planned 7 to 9 p.m. Friday. The exhibits continue through April 25 at the art center, which is open noon to 5 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays.

The David Henry Gill (Main) Gallery will house sculpture by Steve Wilmoth, paintings on paper and canvas by Jono Weiss and paintings and drawings by Frank C. DeCosta.

Marina resident Frank Charles DeCosta describes himself as "an expressionistic surrealist." He received first place in 1980 and 1983 for his oils entered in Monterey County Fair art competitions.

"My approach to oil painting is traditional," DeCosta said. "I find the beauty of oil paint is one's ability to continually rework the surface for greater depth and brilliance."

Jono Weiss of San Francisco described himself as a teller of "little stories" in paint. His "little stories" often take the form of Chaplinesque figures.

"Besides painting pictures, I always wanted to be able to write," Weiss related. "In school my creative writing teacher wanted to know if English was my 'native language.' It seems that writing is not in the cards for me this time around. Nevertheless, I like to tell stories as much as the next person. So I tell stories with paint."

Stephen Wilmoth will show a collection of "radical traditionalist sculpture."

"I consider myself to be a radical traditionalist sculptor, an exponent of the forgotten wisdom of the Golden Age," Wilmoth stated.

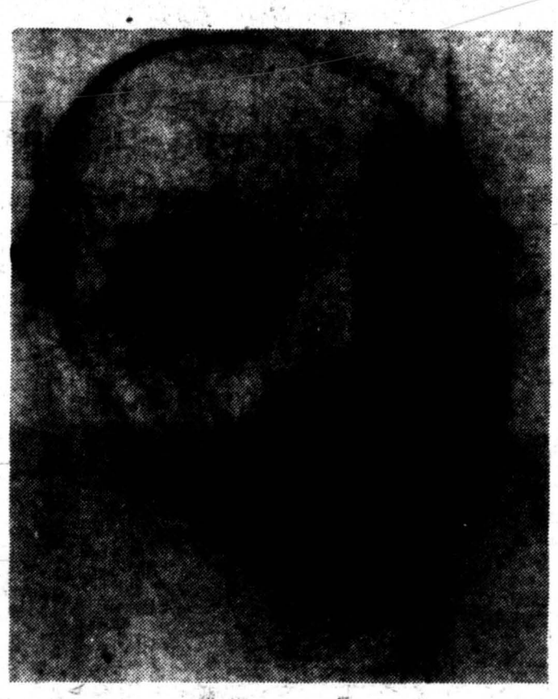
Showing in the Dyke Gallery are relief paintings by Dayton Claudio of Chico. The paintings utilize such materials as plaster, cement, wood, acrylic and gravel.

Claudio observed, "My approach as an artist is derived from the interaction between my concept of nature and my subliminal thoughts. The painting process itself, which includes the use of color, texture and form, involves many techniques which are integrated throughout the works.

Clifford Kluge of Santa Cruz will show a series of large oils in the Hall Gallery. The artist said it is his aim to "combine abstract and representational painting in a literal manner."

Handmade artists' books will be displayed in the Photo Gallery of the center. The collection represents the efforts of a bookbinding class that met last summer at the University of California at Santa Cruz.

For additional information about this exhibition at the Pacific Grove Art Center, call 375-2208.



INCLUDED in an exhibition of paintings and drawings by Frank DeCosta is Looking Back, which depicts what it is like to physically look back into one's own head.

Edward Weston workshop led by his youngest son Cole

THE MONTEREY Peninsula Photographic Workshops present two events this month with Cole Weston as the host.

The color maverick of the Carmel photographic dynasty, Weston will present a slide show and lecture retrospective about his late father entitled "Edward Weston — The Man, Not Myth" at 7 p.m. Sunday, March 23 in Lecture Forum 103 on the Monterey Peninsula College campus.

Earlier in the day, Weston will lead a walking expedition, "In the Tripod Holes of Edward Weston," starting at 8:30 a.m. at Point Lobos. After lunch, the group will visit Edward's studio, and then tour Cole Weston's facilities in Garrapata Canyon.

The walk and special lecture by Cole Weston is part of a series of tributes this year to Edward Weston, the photographer whose name is linked with the masters of the era: Ansel Adams, Imogen Cunningham and W. Eugene Smith.

Edward Weston, who was born 100 years ago this month, moved to the Monterey Peninsula in 1929. He and Adams are most responsible for turning this area into a mecca of fine landscape photography.

When Edward died in 1958, he left son Cole in charge of his vast negative collection. For the past three decades Cole has printed Edward's work while at the same time establishing himself as one of this country's leading color landscape photographers.

"He had that wonderful creative ability of taking things which are commonplace to everyone and making them more than what they are so that the viewer has an insight into that object. Whatever he saw he made it more than what it was," Weston said of his father's work.

Weston describes his father as a simple man, one who shunned complexities. "He never made a negative unless he was moved to do so. He didn't do it on the chance that it may or may not be good. He knew it was good."

In his March 23 lecture, Weston will present a series of slides detailing his father's work from age 16, through his soft-focus period and into the last years of photographing the Monterey Peninsula.

In addition, Weston will read from his father's notes, discuss techniques, chemistry and philosophy, and also provide some personal anecdotes on what it was like to work with his father.

"Edward Weston — The Man, Not Myth" has been presented to audiences in France, Holland, Canada and Great Britain. It is updated and expanded for this special centennial celebration.

Before the lecture, Cole Weston will offer a special personal tour of his father's favorite haunts — "In The Tripod Holes of Edward Weston."

The walk begins at Point Lobos at 8:30 a.m. From there, Weston will guide the group to his father's favorite scenes where Edward recorded dramatic formations with poetic eloquence.

A surprise "a la Weston" picnic lunch of Edward's favorite foods will close the Point Lobos tour.

Edward Weston's last working darkroom in Wildcat Canyon is next on the agenda, followed by a tour of Cole Weston's facilities in Garrapata Canyon. At his studio, Weston will display his personal collection of his father's most famous images.

"In the Tripod Holes of Edward Weston" is set from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sunday, March 23 at Point Lobos. The $55 fee includes lunch. "Edward Weston — The Man, Not Myth" is presented 7 p.m. March 23 in Lecture Forum 103 at Monterey Peninsula College. Admission is $7.50.

Advance reservations are advised; call Roger Fremier or Gail Pierce at 624-6870 or write Monterey Peninsula Photographic Workshops, 980 Fremont St., Monterey 93940.

COLE WESTON will discuss the life and work of his father, Edward Weston, in dual programs offered through Monterey Peninsula College. "In the Tripod Holes of Edward Weston" and "Edward Weston — The Man, Not Myth," will both be presented Sunday, March 23. For registration information, call 624-6870. (Photograph by Roger Fremier.)

ALMOST INDESCRIBABLE

Alaska . . . how does one describe a land so large and massive? Covering 586,412 square miles, and with 33,904 miles of tidal shoreline, this rough and rugged land is "America's Last Frontier", a truly magnificent land of mountains, glaciers, fjords, forests and lakes. The Aleuts, the native inhabitants thought to be of Asian descent, named it Alyeska, meaning "Great Land". The United States purchased the Alaskan Territory from Russia in 1867, at a price of $7,200,000. Thirty years later the hearty pioneer prospectors poured into Alaska seeking gold, and it was in 1959 that Alaska became our 49th state.

ALASKA'S PANHANDLE

Many consider the most scenically beautiful region of the state to be Southeast Alaska. It is a thin strip of coastline stretching from the central portion of the state down the west side of Canada, a nearly 600-mile-long panhandle of mountains laced with waterfalls, looming over forests, fjords and fans of blue-white glaciers. Islands, bays and channels break into the unending blue of the Pacific to form the famed Inside Passage, a protected waterway. Once the outre of settlement by Indians and Russians, the Inside Passage is now plied by cruiseships and ferries. Some 1,000 islands shelter the Passage, and the 54,000 residents of this area live in communities with little room to expand. Air flights and sea lanes are their only links to each other and to the "Lower 48".

Throughout Southeast Alaska you will find remnants of three cultures: totem poles from Alaska's Indian heritage, Russian Orthodox churches from days when the Czar of Imperial Russia ruled these lands, and mining camps of the "sourdoughs" era when gold seekers struggled north in search of fame and fortune. You will also find accommodations ranging from modern seaview hotels to rustic wilderness cabins on secluded bays.

Warmed by ocean currents, principally the Kuroshio Current from Japan, Southeast Alaska experiences mild, warm summers, with July temperatures averaging 60°, though typical midday temperatures are warmer. Winters are cool, but not severely cold, alternating between rain, snow and sunshine. Temperatures below freezing are uncommon, due to the warming effect of the ocean currents, though inland temperatures can be much colder.

The famed rain forests of Southeast Alaska owe their existence to the region's considerable rainfall, averaging almost 100 inches annually. In a normal year, the rainfall tends to be heaviest in fall, lightest in summer. The annual precipitation also is a contributing cause of the area's extensive glaciation: the Juneau Icefields, the Stikine Ice Fields opposite Wrangell, and floes surrounding Glacier Bay National Monument.

There's never been a better year to travel to Alaska. With Expo 86—held in Vancouver from May through October—as a stepping-off point, tour operators and cruise lines are adding new ships, offering more adventure programs, and changing some intineraries. A broader interpretation by U.S. Customs of the cabotage law (the Jones Act), allows foreign flag cruise ships to call at more U.S. ports and to stay longer in those ports. This will be beneficial for Alaska cruising and several ships, including the Sagafjord, Cunard's Princess, sail as far north as Whittier and Anchorage, expanding cruising into the Gulf of Alaska.

Princess Cruises gives you a choice of three ships in the Alaska market. Their beautiful, new Royal Princess will serve Alaska with ten-day cruises from San Francisco, while the Sun Princess and Island Princess are scheduled for seven-night cruises from Vancouver to Skayway and return. Princess Tours combines the three ships with a variety of land itineraries, with prices starting at $947.00 for a 6-day Alaska vacation.

Five of Princess Tours' 1986 itineraries include time in Vancouver to visit Expo 86, and Expo add-ons are available for any of their other 14 itineraries. For the more adventurous traveller, they have an Inside Passage cruise with special excursions at three ports of call: whitewater rafting on Juneau's Mendenhall River; a tour from Skagway to a miner's camp in Dyea; and either a canoe trip in Ketchikan or a marine wildlife motor raft trip to Sitka. Two of the most popular Princess Tour vacations feature both Alaska and the Canadian Rockies. The Royal Alaska Cruise and Rockies, a 16- or 17-day itinerary, includes the Southeast, Vancouver and a circle Rockies tour.

Stop in at your American Express Travel Agency for help in arranging a vacation that will take you to awesome glaciers, gold rush towns, virgin forests and majestic mountains, in comfort and even luxury. What better way to visit this, our last frontier, than on an unforgettable cruise to Alaska?

Viva the West Coast of Mexico

Mention the West Coast of Mexico to travel buffs, and they will smile, envisioning sparkling beaches, tasting the tangy salt of frosty margaritas, and smelling hillsides filled with pale and purple orchids. This is Mexico's glorious Costa de Oro—The Gold Coast. There are ports that predate the Aztecs, fishing villages that come to life before the sun rises each morning and fall into a deep slumber when it sets, a colonial city that is timeless and magnificent, and sparkling brand new resorts that will, in time, rival even the lusty Riviera; all of them tucked into the strong right arm of the mighty Sierra Madre range and swathed in green, rich jungles.

The Mexican Government's dream has been that of making the Gold Coast an easy, lively tourist mecca, and much money has been spent on roads, airports and other tourist facilities. Zihuatanejo, 150 miles up the coast from Acapulco, is a perfect example of the government's forward thrust. An incredibly beautiful fishing town where a dozen oysters and a cold beer is the standard he-man breakfast, Zihuatanejo traditionally could only be reached by an old washboard road or by private plane. It had a South Seas look—scratchy phonograph music coming from thatched-roof restaurants along a perfectly protected bay; big-beaked birds squawking out from the jungle brush; the relentless roar of the surf, each louder breaker followed by moments of numbing, total silence. Zihuatanejo was the place couples escaped to when Acapulco's good life became frenzied. Now a two-lane highway links the two resorts. And next door at Ixtapa, an airport has been built, and deluxe hotels and resorts are dotting the soft, white beaches. Shopping areas, a marina and an 18-hole championship golf course complete the picture—all part of a $50 million investment by Infatur, a trust fund set up by the Mexican Government for the purpose of turning Zihautanejo and Ixtapa into a super resort.

Manzanillo, further up the coast, is also booming. Once so remote and isolated that it was used as the setting for the film version of Robinson Crusoe, Manzanillo now has several hotels, among them the famous Las Hadas, an exclusive white marble, Moorish resort. The town itself still maintains its sun-rinsed atmosphere: a tree-shaded plaza with benches, a port with tiny boats bobbing about, and coconut and banana plantations. There are a number of good beaches; one, called Playa Fairyland, was so named even before the tourists started to arrive.

Plan to attend EXPO 86

International pavilions will be a major draw at EXPO 86.

"All our research shows that the number one attraction for most visitors at world expositions is the international pavilions," comments EXPO 86 President Jim Pattison. "When we first started planning EXPO 86, we aimed for 20 countries. We've more than doubled that. Visitors to Vancouver in 1986 can look forward to seeing national pavilions from six continents."

While many of the pavilions' plans are still confidential, Pattison promises that "Exposition-goers will be dazzled by what they see."

France and Japan on the Move

France's Soule SK people-mover system will transport visitors free-of-charge from the European Plaza into the France Pavilion for a look at some of its world aviation milestones, from the Montgolfier brothers' first aerial balloon voyage in 1783 to the development of the supersonic Concorde.

On the 400-metre-long mag-lev track beside Japan's pavilion, visitors can literally float one centimetre above the rails on the new HSST (High Speed Surface Transport) before travelling inside to a city of tomorrow, complete with port, rail and air facilities.

Sensory Experiences

Hong Kong, Pakistan and the Ivory Coast are all offering a chance to experience the present. Hong Kong's nine-minute, multi-media performance uses 18 singing, dancing and miming performers to recreate a dynamic 24 hours in high-rise Hong Kong. Pakistan's 20th-century bazaar is alive with street sounds and stalls. Visitors passing through the Ivory Coast's immense hand-carved doors will find themselves standing on the docks of Abijan, West Africa's largest port, fragrant with the scent of coffee and cocoa beans.

Barbados' Window on the Future

Further east on the site, Barbados' glass facade and sculptural metallic palm trees open onto a world which mixes tradition with state-of-the-art. Visitors are invited to share in an archaeological "find" as well as demonstrations of fibre optic telecommunications.

Norway, Philippines and the Republic of Korea

Man has travelled by rail for 178 years and by airplane for a mere 82 years, but by boat for hundreds of centuries, a fact made real in the pavilions of Norway, the Philippines and the Republic of Korea. Norway's original 10th-century Viking ship balances innovative 20th-century offshore technology. Replicas of Thor Heyerdahl's ocean-going rafts, the Ra and the Kon-Tiki, will also be displayed.

Even the exterior of the Philippines' pavilion resembles a vinta, a Filipino sailboat. Inside a small mahogany banca and an ancient ferry are testimony to traditional shipbuilding skills, while colorful jeepneys recognize today's urban transport artists.

The Republic of Korea's pavilion symbol, the turtle ship, is decorated with the head of a turtle. It once contained a sulphur smoke generator to mask the fleet's movements.

U.S., U.S.S.R. and the People's Republic of China

The United States and the U.S.S.R. will invite visitors to explore space travel in their pavilions, while the People's Republic of China will recognize its great rivers, timeless cargo routes for this ancient civilization.

A NEW WORLD?

To the Spanish Conquistadors of the 16th century, South America was a new world . . . one of unknown geographic boundaries and unlimited riches. To most North Americans, South America still is an unexplored "New World", rich in enchanting cultures, exciting cities and captivating beauty. Those wishing to visit this fascinating new world should keep in mind that it would be almost impossible to see all of South America in one trip.

Just consider: South America stretches from the Caribbean beaches of Panama and Columbia to the glacial parklands of Southern Argentina and Chile. The massive spine of the Andes Mountains runs some 5,000 miles along South American's Pacific Coast, cradling in its highlands ruins of the most ancient civilizations. Remember, if you can, some geography trivia: South America has the world's highest waterfall, the world's longest river, and one single country that in itself is larger than mainland USA. Or focus on: a string of snowcapped volcanoes on the equator, breathtaking fjords further south, fringes of pearly beaches north and south, islands inhabited by one-of-a-kind fauna, and jungles blooming with unique flora. Artifacts from pre-Columbian eras fill the continent's museums with dazzling gold work, pottery, weavings and carvings. And these skills from the past have not been lost, as you will see in the beautiful handicrafts and folk arts that make shopping such fun. The Spaniards, and later the Portuguese, came, saw and conquered. They built their own golden cathedrals, Andalusian monasteries and Moorish palaces over Indian temples and laid out their cities in the same strategic locations. Chrisitan met pagan, and a new folklore was born. It thrives today in hundreds of festivals that honor the saints and quiet the gods.

Among the more unforgettable attractions of South America is the unsolved mystery of the Incan civilization. Few people of the Old World ever reached the advanced state achieved by the Incas. Remains of their art, their architecture and their transportation systems attest to their development and organization. When the Spaniards arrived, in the 1500's, their influence covered nearly half of the South American continent. Cuzco, the ancient capital of the Incan Empire, sits at 11,000 feet above sea level and is the oldest continuously inhabited city in America. It is also the gateway to Machu Picchu — Lost City of the Incas, built at the summit of an almost inaccessible mountain overlooking a jagged canyon and surrounded by savage mountain peaks. A visit to Peru is a step back in time, and will be a memorable vacation by itself, or as part of a longer trip.

You'll benefit more from your travel to this diverse continent if you do some planning and selecting. To maximize your travel enjoyment and minimize expenses, consider joining a tour, especially on the first visit to a country or region. You'll find travel packages for as short as a week, or touring itineraries for as long as a month. More than any other travel company, American Express can show you the best of South America's nine most fabulous countries. For over 40 years,

Hawaii Is . . .

Hawaii is a land of superlatives, of sights and sounds and smells and things to touch and taste and do that will leave your senses soaring.

Hawaii is scenery: volcanoes, valleys, rivers and waterfalls; vast expanses of sunny sand beaches and a soothing sea; fern forests and flowers and fruit; cactus deserts and rolling ranchland.

Hawaii is activity: swimming and sailing and surfing and snorkeling; championship tennis and challenging golf courses; seaside hotels and lavish resorts and fine restaurants.

Hawaii, too is her people, some with histories that date back to 1100 AD; proud people from Polynesia, Micronesia and Melanesia; Japanese and Chinese people; people from the Philippines and Portugal and Pennsylvania.

Oahu, known as the "Gathering Place" is the capital of Hawaii's five peaceful and principal neighboring islands. Stretching eastward lie the islands of Molokai — the "Friendly Isle," and Maui — the "Valley Isle." A scant few miles to Oahu's west, suspended in a warm sapphire sea, is the multi-flowered "Garden Isle," the island of Kauai. Then there's the largest of them all, the "Big Island" is Hawaii, with its spectacular white-ruffled coastline and grumbling volcanoes.

ISLES OF SMILES

"Aloha" is how ancient Hawaiians would greet one another, as they met or left, as they simply expressed thanks, love and appreciation to one another. Alo means "to face" while HA means "the breath of life." Aloha implies reverence for life, and for the "mana" — the power or spirit — that life implies.

The tradition of a lei greeting — a garland of flowers and fragrance accompanied by a kiss — is as old as Hawaii itself. From the time the volcano goddess Pele's sister Hiiaka is said to have presented the first leis to her sisters on a beach in Puna, these greetings have become art, custom and ornament. In ancient times, leis took the form of head wreaths and necklets, as well as the long strands we know today. They were used originally as offerings to dieties in the sacred dances and chants of Hawaii. A lei worn in a dance was never given away; it belonged to the goddess of the dance.

In the days of steamship travel, tossing a lei overboard was a custom introduced by the West. If a tossed lei returned to shore, it was thought, the visitor would return to Hawaii. Today the custom of presenting leis belongs to everyone. In authentic Hawaiian tradition, it begins with an attitude, a spirit of thankfulness, as each blossom is picked, then carefully strung one by one, so that each will shine at its most brilliant. It may take a thousand blossoms to fill a lei. It is a symbol of beauty, made with care and given with love.

Honolulu . . . Hono = "Bay" and Lulu = "Sheltered." The name of Hawaii's capital explains why Honolulu and Oahu have been the business, political and cultural center of the Hawaiian Islands since the 1800's. Until Pearl Harbor was made navigable early in this century, Honolulu's harbor was the only protected body of water its size within 2,000 miles of Hawaii. Most visitors to Hawaii arrive to the islands at Honolulu International airport and spend their first night on Oahu, in one of the more than 25,000 hotel rooms in Waikiki. There's much to see and do in Waikiki: the Iolani Palace, the State Capitol, the National Memorial Cemetery, Pearl Harbor. But save time and energy to explore the glittering array of shops, and the International Market Place. With a rental car, you could head out past Diamond Head too Hanauma Bay, the underwater State Park, or on to the Polynesian Cultural Center, Accommodations range from budget hotels to deluxe resorts, to suit every taste and budget.

Maui, the second largest island in the archipelago, is the best known and most developed of the outer islands. Like Oahu, Maui began as two separate volcanic peaks that fused together thousands of centuries ago as lava bubbled and flowed down their respective craters. West Maui broke first from the ocean floor and became serrated into several mountains. This dormant crater area is enveloped by the Lao Valley and the Puu Kukui, a 5,788-foot summit that is the second rainest peak in Hawaii. East Maui, the larger land mass, was formed during three distinct periods of volcanic activity centered at Haleakala, the legendary "House of the Sun" volcano. Gradually, lava flowed westward from Haleakala and cooled against the base of the West Maui volcano. The low-lying isthmus that joins the two peaks today gives Maui its nickname — the "Valley Isle." boasts the sophisticated Kaanapali Beach area, with lavish resorts, and picturesque golf courses. Lahaina, the historic whaling village, retains the spirit and architecture of its hey-days of the 1800's, while offering excellent shopping and romantic waterfront restaurants.

At the heart of the islands of Kauai, the oldest and lushest of Hawaii's islands, is a wonderland of vegetation and fauna. Here, a long, narrow depression called the Alakai Swamp lies suspended amid the mountains. From its sides fall thin, jagged ridges and deep, verdant valleys and canyons. At its eastern end is Waialeale, the wettest spot on earth, where almost 500 inches of rain fall annually. At the other end are the precipitous ridges and valleys called Na Pali, the Cliffs. And knifing across the island's west and north shores is the remarkable roseate Waimea Canyon. Awesome and scenic in the interior, Kauai is nevertheless fringed with some of the most beautiful beaches in the world. On the sunny south end, the rapidly growing Poipu Beach area offers an array of hotel, resort and condominium accommodations.

So complex is the big island of Hawaii that no nickname embraces all of it at once. Call it the "Orchid Island" for the wild purple blossoms that grace roadsides of Puna and Hilo. Or call it the "Volcano Island," for half of it is alive with myriad fissures steaming and two mountains eager to erupt. But call it the "Big Island," for it is so huge that each of its five districts is larger than any other island in the Hawaiian chain. Travel around the Big Island can begin at either Kona or Hilo. Regardless of where you start, you'll experience a meaningful sequence of its varied climates, landscapes, peoples and adventures: humble flowers in Hilo, plantation towns in Hamakua, giant valleys in North Kohala, cattle ranches in Kamuela, coffee hills and coastal resorts in Kona, startling green sand at Ka'u, and finally, active Kilauea Volcano in Puna.

Whether your Hawaiian vacation plans include just relaxing on a beach, or marveling over the abundant natural beauty, or exploring the activities and entertainment available; there's an island to fit your choice.

Don't Leave Home Without Them®

Whether traveling in the United States or planning a trip abroad, you will need money. The questions today are: "What form of money do I carry?" and "How do I protect myself from losing it or having it stolen?". Travel industry experts recommend carrying travelers cheques as a safe and easy-to-use alternative to cash. We recommend American Express® Travelers Cheques.

The reasons are clear. American Express Travelers Cheques offer convenience and security. They are accepted by merchants and establishments worldwide, and if they are lost or stolen, you can arrange for a refund or have the cheques replaced.

From around the world, customers can call toll-free numbers, or phone collect, report the stolen cheques, and arrange for replacements.

Last year, American Express introduced a new refund service in 70 major cities in the United States. With this service, Travelers Cheques refunds can be delivered by special courier within three hours of a reported loss—every day, 24 hours a day, and at no extra charge. Now, you don't even have to leave your home, hotel or swimming pool to receive a refund. To make the refund process easier, American Express suggests that you safeguard your purchase receipts by keeping them separate from your cheques.

American Express will also arrange to cancel any lost or stolen credit cards; make new hotel, car rental and airline reservations if plans have to be changed; give you a free telegram or international cable home to advise of plan changes; and, during normal business hours, issue a temporary identification card if your driver's license or passport has also been lost or stolen. Remember to closely study the services offered by various makers of travelers cheques; they do make a difference.

When purchasing your travelers cheques, you need to consider in which denominations you wish to carry them. American Express issues Travelers Cheques in $20, $50, $100 and $500 denominations. In addition, when traveling overseas, you may be able to buy cheques in the currency of the countries you will be visiting. American Express issues Travelers Cheques in seven currencies: U.S. dollars, Canadian dollars, British pounds, German marks, French francs, Swiss francs and Japanese yen.

American Express Travelers Cheques are recognized worldwide, are readily accepted and can be replaced. They are an excellent alternative to cash—as convenient, but safer. When you're planning your vacation, think of American Express Travelers Cheques as the safe, easy way to carry your funds.

Viva Mexico

Venture still further up the coast to Puerto Vallarta, whose movie-magic mystique has made it a perennial favorite of writers, artists and film stars, a trend that began years ago when Richard Burton and Liz Taylor filmed "The Night of the Iguana" at nearby Mismaloya. The natives still point out the Burtons' former property, two homes connected across a street by an overhead walkway. Puerto Vallarta seems almost determined to halt progress, or at least impede it. Although shopkeepers have moved in from the big cities, and there are a number of fine hotels, good restaurants and a disco, village life goes on as it has for years. Women wash their laundry on the banks of the Rio Cuale, drying the clothes on special flat stones in the shade of hastily erected palm thatches; while the men go about their business of farming and fishing, unhampered by the presence of tourists.

Mazatlan, about halfway between the U.S. border and Mexico City, is second only to Acapulco as a major Mexican seaside resort. Its easy accessibility to visitors from California, Arizona and Texas makes it one of the more developed of Mexican coastal areas.

There is really no more easy or pleasant way to visit the Gold Coast of Mexico than by "floating resort"—a cruise ship. For 1986 Princess Cruises will offer a dramatically varied cruise program, highlighted by fare reductions, a streamlined air program, and new cruises and destinations. In the area of fares, a 15% reduction from 1985 levels will be in effect for all 1986 cruises to the Mexican Riviera. The Seabird Air program will offer fly-free programs from all gateway cities for passengers booking outside staterooms. While the inside staterooms will be subject to air add-ons, they will be a nominal $100 for all bookings.

According to Michael Hannan, Sr. Vice President of Princess Cruises, some notable changes will take place in the 1986 schedule. For the first time since 1978, Princess will offer seven-day roundtrip cruises from Los Angeles to the Mexican Riviera throughout winter and spring. These sailings aboard the Island Princess will alternate with the ship's seven-day fly-cruises between Los Angeles and Acapulco. On the roundtrip cruises, calls will be made at Mazatlan, Puerto Vallarta and Cabo San Lucas. During the summer months, the ship will base in Vancouver and make seven-day Alaska cruises.

So Much to Choose From

Quick . . . name an exotic, adventurous once-in-a-lifetime vacation destination. Did you say Nepal and the Himalayas? Why not? With the recent accord signed between the People's Republic of China and the Kingdom of Nepal, the border between Tibet and Nepal is now open and it is possible to view this awesome environment that is the Himalaya. Nepali culture is a mixture of Hinduism and Buddhism, and a visit there includes exotic temples, ancient capitals, and stunning scenery. This is the newest itinerary to choose from when you travel to the Orient with American Express. It's just one of the 19 fascinating vacations available in 1986.

If this is your first trip, you may want to choose a 12-day visit to three great cities: Hong Kong, crossroads of Asia; Bangkok, capital of modern Thailand; and Singapore, blending point for the Malaysian, Chinese and Indian cultures. Or take an Imperial Journey, 15 days exploring the beauty, culture and grace of Japan. How about mammoth, fascinating China? You can view the cradle of Chinese civilization at Xian, walk the Great Wall, or cruise the Yangtze. Maybe you want it all? In one 15-day trip you can get acquainted with the three major cultures of Asia—Chinese, Japanese and British.

The Far East is the ancient lands of Asia, the very heart of the Orient and the centers of many cultures. You will be enveloped by unusual sights and sounds and even smells. Among the greatest pleasures is the shopping. It is diverse, exciting, full of fun and fantasy, and often with amazing values. Hong Kong remains the world's greatest shipping mart, renowned for cameras, jewelry, jade and, of course, custom-tailored clothing. Singapore is growing into a major rival, with good buys on manufactured ware. Thailand is famed for gorgeous batiks and printed cottons; Japan's specialty is photographic and audio equipment, with big buys in pearls of all shapes and sizes.

To plan your travel, it's best to ask lots of questions: When is the best time to go? What's the climate? How strenuous is the trip? What visas do I need? Put yourself into the hands of your travel professional American Express Vacations and ENJOY!

Cruising Might Be The Perfect Vacation

It's easy to imagine the perfect vacation: you settle into comfortable accomodations, surrounded by a worry-free atmosphere, solicitous service and great dining. You dabble in activities when you want, you enjoy live entertainment, you explore new locales, all with convenience and ease. We've just described a cruise vacation. Make a cruise ship your mode of travel and you eliminate the hassle of hailing cabs, of finding restaurants, of airport hang-ups, of packing and repacking. You've got at your fingertips facilities to make your relaxation complete: pools and deck chairs, bars and lounges, theaters and nightclubs. And you won't be lacking any amenities: beauty salons and barber shops, laundry and medical service, telephone and telegraph. Your "floating hotel" is like a self-contained resort that pampers and lulls you to a perfect vacation on your way to your ports of call.

Cruising is growing tremendously. Almost four million persons will embark on a vacation on over 100 cruise ships this year. The variety of offerings is fantastic. There are cruises with dozens of ports and cruises to nowhere; cruises of one day or world cruises lasting three months. Some highlight the world's most beautiful beaches, others provide the opportunity to explore some of the globe's most remote reaches.

Here's a sampling to whet your appetite:

In the classic style of the great passenger liners, Royal Viking Line transports you through the Panama Canal. A massive concrete gate swings open, letting in a torrent of water that eases your ship up approxinately 60 feet to the next chanber and closer to the ocean lying ahead. Effortlessly you have just lived out the dream of Ferdinand de Lesseps, architect of the Panama Canal. Completed in 1914, the 50-mile canal runs northwest and cost $366 million to build. Sip a frosty fruit punch as your ship squeezes between the two Americas into the island-dotted Gatun Lake. You hardly notice you just cut off 8,000 miles from the voyage "Around the Horn." And you experience it from an environment of roominess, elegance and comfort. With one of the highest cubic-foot-per-passenger ratios in the industry, your Royal Viking ship is geared to your mood, whether you're socializing and seeking activity, or eyeing a pleasant spot for privacy and seclusion. Your entertainment features the Big Band sounds from the bands of renown; orchestras like Count Basie, Glenn Miller and Duke Ellington. What a way to go!

You can combine the ambiance of Italy and the lure of cruising aboard Sun Line's exciting Stella Maris. Board in beautiful Venice and cruise the Dalmatian Coast to Dubrovnik. Steep yourself in culture as you continue to Tunis, picturesque Costa Smeralda and popular Elba; then finish off in sophisticated Nice. All of this amid the pampering and unique yacht-like atmosphere that is the trademark of Sun Line cruising. The Greek tradition of unquestioned hospitality drives the staff; the spacious staterooms and sumptuous lounges provide you the freedom of life on board. And as you watch the golden sun set over the satin smooth sea, you'll vow to make all your vacations a cruise experience.
